Russian Author Greatly Pleased With Nobel Win

EDITOR'S NOTE: Boris Pasternak's delight at winning the 1958 Nobel prize in literature is reflected in the following dispatch. It combines two stories submitted to Soviet censorship in Moscow a few hours after the award was announced in Stockholm Thursday. They were received in the United States Friday night.

By HAROLD K. MILKS

MOSCOW (AP) — Boris Pasternak took a solitary walk in the rain Thursday upon hearing he had won the 1958 Nobel prize in literature.

The grey-haired, soft - spoken writer, whose novel Doctor Zhivago is critical of communism, said he was overwhelmed and overjoyed.

He was splattered by a chill rain and his high boots were muddy when a party of reporters found him striding along a country road about 20 miles from Moscow.

"Yes, I heard about it," he said when told of the award voted him by the Swedish Academy of Letters. "That's one reason I'm out here—I think better when I walk."

MAY MAKE JOURNEY

"Will you go to Stockholm to accept the Nobel prize?" the 68-year-old author and poet was asked.

"That's something else I'm thinking about," he replied. "I would like to go to Stockholm. I have heard nothing official yet. But it's given me a lot to think about."

(Pasternak later received a telegram from the Swedish Academy officially notifying him of the award of the prize, worth $41,420. He expressed gratitude in a cabled reply to Dr. Anders Oesttrling, the academy secretary, and said he hoped to get to Stockholm to accept the award Dec. 10. It generally was believed in Moscow that he would make the trip.)

Pasternak talked willingly about himself and his life in a large dacha—country home—at Peredelnika, a writers village not far from Moscow.

Pasternak's controversial Doctor Zhivago, originally printed last year in Italy, never has been published in the Soviet Union. But it created a stir in the outside world.

The author, in another interview, said he did not believe his winning the Nobel prize would mean the novel would be published in the Soviet Union after all.

He added he did not believe he would be affected adversely personally because this award would focus world attention more strongly on the book.

He completed the novel in 1954 and it had been scheduled for publication here at the end of 1956 after being accepted by the state publishing house.

At this point Pasternak arranged for the book's simultaneous publication in Italy. He sold foreign rights to Milan publisher Giancarlo Feltrinelli.

But Soviet authorities found the manuscript objectionable in parts and told Pasternak to write Feltrinelli to withhold publication and return the manuscript "for revision."

Feltrinelli refused and went ahead.

The novel was published in the United States in September.

SOVIET OPINION LOW

The Soviet Encyclopidia has a low opinion of Nobel literature prizes in general.

It says Nobel awards "especially so far as literature and work for peace are concerned are not infrequently determined by political interests of reactionary circles."

The Soviet Literary Gazette said Friday the award of the 1958 prize to Pasternak was a "hostile political act."

In the first Soviet comment on the award, the Gazette says "the decision of the Swedish Academy of Letters and philology is aimed at fanning the cold war against the Soviet Union, the Soviet regime and the ideas of all-conquering socialism."

The article said the academy conferred the award on an "artistically squalid, malicious work replete with the hatred of socialism." The really great traditions of Russian prose writers were alien to the author.

Acting Premier Of N.S. Expresses Deep Sympathy

HALIFAX (CP)—Highway Minister G.I. Smith, acting Premier of Nova Scotia, Friday issued the following statement:

"The provincial government shares with the people of Nova Scotia deepest concern for and sympathy with the th stricken town of Springhill in this latest catastrophe.

"During the night a government headquarters was established in the armouries at Springhill with the minister of labor, the minister of mines, the civil defence co-ordinator, representatives of the armed services and of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police present. This headquarters has been and is in constant touch with the mayor of Springhill and the officials of the company and it will continue to function as long as the situation requires.

"All arrangements relating to the disaster, except concerning the actual conduct of the rescue operations will be co-ordinated through this headquarters.

"Offers of assistance are being constantly made by various organizations and by members of the public generally. These offers are greatly appreciated.

"At the present time medical and welfare supplies and facilities appear to be adequate and more are available should they be required.

"The Springhill disaster relief fund committee which was organized following the 1956 disaster has met at the armouries in Springhill this morning.

"The rescue crews are working with their usual outstanding courage, ability and energy. Every useful thing which can be done is being done.

"One of the best means of cooperating the general public can give is to refrain from using the highways leading to and in the vicinity of Springhill, and from going into the town. I therefore ask all persons to give this cooperation."
