SILKEN FROCK

Silk is queen this season and many and beautiful are the silken treasures prepared for early spring wear. Patullo-Jo Copeland is responsible for this charmer, a low-necked princess dress with inverted pleats and a brief bolero with collar and cuffs of black velvet. The fabric is crepe de chine, the print, yellow roses on a black ground, the result, an ensemble that should see a busy season.

MARY HAWORTH

Couple Are Always Present

Dear Mary Haworth: In a few days my husband and I will be celebrating our 30th wedding anniversary! In our home we have been entertaining quite a bit all these years.

Parties are a delight to me and my husband loves them. If we had a party every other night it would please him thoroughly.

My husband's favorite friends are two couples whom we have known since before we got married. These people have dined with us as many as three or four times, before they invite us back.

I got f.3-up and told my husband that I was willing to give them dinner twice for every dinner they give us; but that was enough. He got sore, and now when I am out of town he invites them to our house for dinner, and they come.

Is it right for my husband to have them in for dinner during my absence? And is it proper for them to accept, knowing that I am away? Please advise me. K.S. BIG QUESTION

Dear K.S.: You say your husband loves parties and entertaining, and would delight in dispensing hospitality every other evening.

Well, as you know, it takes guests to make a party; and not everybody has the stamina, or the interest in parties, to keep the pace your husband prefers. But fortunately (from his angle) he's found these long-time favorite friends—the other two couples—who've been able and willing to (more or less) accommodate his gregarious nature.

So it's a sizable question, as to just who is indebted to whom, when they've come to your house for dinner, three or four times in succession, without dining you at their house in between.

Possibly if you and he were less aggressive socially, in the sense of giving fewer parties or dinners—at which your husband has wanted them—these close friends might have made a better showing, in "paying back." Maybe they just can't invest as much time and energy, being guests, as your husband requires, and also catch your frequency in playing hosts—and still stay alive, and ahead of the wolf.

Thus in the scales of perfect justice, it might be found that you were indebted to them, for taking up so much of their life—end of their being in your debt, as you had supposed.

In any case, a visiting exchange between old friends isn't a mule trade. It shouldn't be figured sharply in terms of who's getting or giving most.

REAL ISSUE

It is my surmise that you've turned thumbs down on your husband's old friends for reasons undisclosed. Maybe they appeal to a side of his nature that you disapprove; or maybe they openly prefer his company to yours. Possibly you've wanted to reduce their influence, therefore use the "social debt" argument for seeing much less of them.

If these people don't know they are a bone of contention in your household, they may be excused for accepting your husband's invitations when you are away—because they may feel they are relieving the loneliness of a temporary bachelor. As to whether your husband is justified in asking them—all things considered, probably not. He should be loyal to wife, before pleasure. If a choice must be made, M.H.

28-POUND GOLD NUGGET

MOSCOW (AP)—Moscow newspapers said Saturday a gold nugget weighing nearly 28 pounds has been found at the bodiabo mines in the Irkutsk region of eastern Siberia. The papers said a nugget weighing more than 21 pounds was found in the Ural mountains.
