ADVERTISING RATES

For small advertisements which are ordered for only one or two weeks the charge is 50 cents per inch for the first insertion, and 25 cents for each continuation. Rate cards are furnished on application at the office. Special contract prices at a reduced rate are quoted for advertisements four inches in size or larger, which are to run for three months or longer.

No special notices inserted unless paid for at the rate of 10 cents per line, and under no circumstances will such paid notices appear in the local column.

Special discounts made on all advertisements connected with Church Fairs, Bazaars, Picnics, etc. No notices will be inserted with the same unless the regular rate of 10 cents per line is paid.

THAT THE EXAMINER is considered by our Merchants and Manufacturers to be the leading newspaper in P. E. Island, and consequently the most valuable advertising medium through which to make their announcements public, is abundantly proved by the fact that in order to accommodate our advertisers we have been compelled to enlarge the paper to its present size.

THE DAILY EXAMINER is for sale by the following agents :—

COTTOLENE COTTOLENE

OUT OF THE FRYING PAN

Has come not a little knowledge as to cookery—what to do, as well as what not to do. Thus we have learned to use the most pure and perfect and popular cooking material for all frying and shortening purposes.

PROGRESSIVE COOKING

is the natural outcome of the age, and it teaches us not to use lard, but rather the new shortening, which is far cleaner, and more digestible than any lard can be.

COTTOLENE,

The success of Cottolene has called out worthless imitations under similar names. Look out for these! Ask your Grocer for COTTOLENE, and be sure that you get it.

AUSTRALIAN MAGIC.

A TYPICAL RAIN-PRODUCER OF THE SOUTHERN CONTINENT.

Power of the Wizards Over the Tribes Among Whom They Practice—Cunning Use of Sleight-of-Hand Tricks and Knowledge of Rain Clouds.

In common with all savages, the aborigines of Australia have a goodly number of wizards among them, who pretend to communicate with the spirits of the dead, and to gain valuable information from them. These impostors claim to be able to produce death or sickness at will among their enemies, or those of their tribe, and there seems to be little reason to doubt them, for they are known to possess no mean degree of skill in the preparation and use of certain crude poisons, made principally from vegetable substances. So, too, they claim to cure all diseases, although, naturally, their claims to this power are much less easily upheld. It is much easier to make a well man sick with drugs than to make a sick man well, as any of our physicians can testify. The power over the "devil-devil," or evil power of the spirit world, however, they lay most stress upon, and this they are most successful in proving to the satisfaction of their dupes.

To uphold these preposterous claims they have very naturally had constant recourse to such forms of magic or double dealing as have occurred to their benighted intellects. Whatever may be said of their low rank in human scale, it must be admitted that they are keen and constant observers of the things of nature about them. An instance which I had the opportunity of witnessing while in Western Australia convinced me of their cunning in this respect.

A long and disastrous drought, which had almost ruined the small tribe on whose borders I was encamped, had resulted in their demanding of the tribe wizard that the much-needed rain be produced, and that forwith. The first act of the charlatan was to call the people together, and, during a sort of pow-wow, to perform a few feats of simple magic, such as any tyro in the sleight-of-hand arts could surpass. Then he ascended into the highest tree in the vicinity, where he remained for some time in silent contemplation of the sky.

I was informed that he was working wonders at that great height—he was quite 200 feet from the ground—which would soon result in refreshing showers being sent by the devil-devil, who kept back the needed rains at the solicitation of the wizards of nearby, envious tribes. My field-glass disclosed the fact, however, that he was sitting aloft, in the most comfortable manner he could command, straining his eyes toward the horizon, when his study of past seasons had taught him the first storms of the rainy season, then overdue, always came.

This farce was kept up for several days. Every morning he climbed to his lofty perch and stayed there long enough to assure himself that no rain was likely to appear that day, after which he returned to the earth with a tale of the anger of the evil spirit, and with demands for tribute wherewith to appease him. Very shrewdly he chose only such articles of tribute as would enable him to live in idleness for some weeks to come.

After several days, but not until my barometer had foretold an approaching storm, he remained one morning but a short time in the tree. He returned to the ground with all the airs of a conquering hero. Then followed a very interesting, though ridiculous, performance. Tying a cloth tightly about his head, he went through a series of contortions, during which he carried around a large gourd or calabash. He took much care to show that this was empty, and then, with much ceremony, marched to a nearly-fallen tree, holding it upside down. Here, in the sight of all his dupes, he placed it on the stump, and, removing the cloth from his head, began to wring it out as though it was full of water. As I thought the whole performance was simply meant to typify the tribe's desire for water, I had not watched him as closely as I should have done had I been prepared for his next act. Turning suddenly, with the gourd in his hand, he tipped it slightly, and from it poured clear, limpid water. Then he marched triumphantly among his people, exhibiting it, and proving to the satisfaction of all that it was purer water than they had seen for weeks.

The performance was greeted with shouts of delight. It was taken as a sure sign that the devil-devil had relented, and granted this much water as a sign of the blessing soon to follow.

Among the cries the tribe's word for grass or green was frequently uttered. Responding to this the wizard put down the gourd, and, without any further preparations, began to extract handfuls of fresh grass from his forehead, his back and his thighs. This was a very neatly executed trick of palming small balls of grass, ready prepared, from the folds of his loin-cloth, so that he might seem to have gotten them from his skin in various parts of his body.

With this performance my opinion of the imposter went up very considerably. I well knew that he could not have gotten this grass, a marsh-growing kind, without a tramp of at least seven miles each way. Moreover, as the trip must have been taken at night, while the tribe slept, and when everyone else of his people would have feared to be about alone, the courage and endurance shown in maintaining his ascendance over his dupes was remarkable.

This last show of his power, which by his people was received with much awe, was followed by his immediate return to the tree-top, where he could be seen gesticulating wildly, and be heard uttering the most unearthly yells. Fortunately for his powers of endurance, he did not long have to maintain this exhausting labor. He had hardly been in the tree more than ten or fifteen minutes before clouds began to gather over the tree tops, and soon the big drops, which were the welcome forerunners of the coming rain, began to fall.

Thus, by two simple sleight-of-hand tricks, a cunning use of his knowledge of the rainy season and of rain clouds, and the use of his tree observatory, he was able to most completely prove to the willing believers of his tribe that he was gifted with supernatural powers.—Dr. Eugene Stander, in Buffalo Express.

Bad Manners.

A man's disposition is in some degree responsible for his manners, but an abrupt or fretful and generally disagreeable manner is often the result of a disordered digestion which Hawker's nerve and stomach tonic and Hawker's liver pills will permanently cure. Try them and be happy.

I COULD KNOW.

If I could know to-day
That in some far to-morrow you would long
To hear the rapids' purling song
About their boulders grey,
That in some homesick moment you would fain
Be drifting through this sunlit June again—

If I were sure that you
Would sometimes wish with all your heart to be
Adrift and dreaming, while you shared with me,
My wandering canoe,
I would not dread the shore of future days
That we must touch—then take our sundered ways.

If I could but believe
That sometimes when you see a sunset sky,
You will recall the night when you and I
Watched all the colors weave
Their wine-like glory round the western gate,
I would not ask a dearer thing of Fate.

If only I could know,
When Indian summer smiles with dusky lip,
You still will long to hear my paddle dip
Through rapids laughing low—
Then I would be assured beyond a doubt
Your hearts had not—exactly barred me out.
—Pauline Johnson.

Italy a Volcano.

Everywhere you go in Italy you see the soldiery. There are 400,000 fine-looking, handsomely dressed fellows living at the expense of a population which finds it extremely difficult to pay its bills, and which cannot pay its taxes. The people ask themselves why they should continue to maintain this costly luxury. They are proud of their army, but it is a ruinous pride, and they will be glad to get rid of it. The Italian farmer, wage-earner, shopkeeper, the average Italian from Sicily to the Alps asks only to be let alone, and to be permitted to earn his living in peace. He cares not a jot for the issues between France and Germany and Russia and Austria. He knows well enough that the people of those countries have no desire to interfere with him, and he has no desire to interfere with them. But he is, as they are, the sport of politicians, of individuals who call themselves statesmen, of royal houses which wish to keep what they have got, of intriguing cabals and ambitious military men. The common people of these nations have no quarrel with one another. Italy would fight, and fight hard, to save herself, but I do not think she would cut off her right arm to save the house of Savoy, nor her left to restore the temporal power of the Pope. Whatever changes may come will have to deal not only with papacy and with the crown, it will also have to deal with a democracy, some sort of democracy.

Italy to-day is a political volcano. You hear the rumbling which precedes the eruption; you see the little smoke-cloud curling at the peak. The eruption may be stayed for years, in the Vesuvian fashion, but when it comes somebody will have to stand from under. Institutions, men, prerogatives will be swept away and buried. The eruption will throw up debris, no doubt, but it will also produce a commanding figure. The opportunity will come, and with the opportunity the man.—Italian Cor. Boston Herald.

Seed Thoughts.

The great thing in this world is not so much where we stand as in what direction we are moving. To reach the port of heaven we must sail sometimes with the wind and sometimes against it, but we must sail and not drift nor lie at anchor. —Oliver Wendell Holmes.

One must look downward as well as upward in human life. Though many have passed you in the race, there are many you have left behind.—Sydney Smith.

Sin may open bright as the morning, but it will end dark as night.—Selected.

When the devil fishes he knows there is no time lost by being careful about his bait. —Ram's Horn.

The Latest Amusement.

"Fad parties" are the latest form of amusement among the people who devote a good deal of mental energy to their entertainment. Each guest is expected to bring with her something which represents her hobby, and to talk about it interestingly. The woman with a passion for souvenir spoons brings one from her collection and discourses on the subject. The woman whose taste runs to antiques comes armed with an ugly little bit of china and information concerning antique shops. Even the young person whose fancy is merely for neckties brings her pet one and treats her fellow guests to necktie lore.

All this is very pleasant when there are only women present. But when there are men also with their queer hobbies, the situation is sometimes painful. The man with a passion for natural history may bring his bugs and beetles, but they prove embarrassing to the women of the party. The man whose sole relaxation in life is chess playing is apt to prove a bore. On the whole it is well to make the "fad party" a strictly feminine function.

New Appellation for Men.

When a woman is unmarried she is called Miss. When she is married she is called Mrs. A man, whatever be his state, is Mr. Why should there not be some special designation for married men? Master has been suggested as an easy and not too great a change from Mr. for the designation of married men. Thus Mr. Brown, after turning from the altar, would be Master Brown. This, however, is objected to on the ground that little boys are called Master by servants and teachers, and the intimation would be that a man by marrying has entered his second childhood. By using the latin Dominus, as in Portuguese, and call Mr. Brown Dom Brown, the designation would be properly made. Another suggestion is that before a man marries, the syllable "Ap" be attached to his name. Thus Mr. Ap. Brown, a son of Brown, would, on marrying, become Mr. Brown himself. Whether or no these suggestions be adopted, it is plain that there is a necessity for some such distinctive appellation.—New York Sun.

Used Opium for Paint.

A rancher on Vashon island, Washington, has his house painted more expensively than any other house in the State. Last fall he found a box which contained about 200 pounds of what he thought was a fine quality of fireproof paint, floating in the sound. The paint was packed in small tin cans, and bore a foreign label, and as it had cost him nothing, he thought he would paint his house with it. The house is now painted inside and out, and, in doing so, the greater portion of the paint was consumed. The rancher has discovered, much to his sorrow, that instead of fireproof paint, he has his house covered with about $3000 worth of smuggled opium, which was thrown overboard by smugglers.
