CONTRACT BRIDGE

East deals. North-South vulnerable. NORTH ♠K ♣K7 ♢77653 ♠KQ5 WEST ♠Q62 ♣94 ♢K1098 ♠9873 EAST ♠743 ♣108653 ♢A10 ♠A105 ♣AQJ8 ♢A4 ♠A10

The bidding: East Pass South 2NT West Pass North 6NT Opening lead—nine of clubs. You don't find much written in books about the role good temperament plays at the bridge table. But the player who gets upset because he just had an unlucky break, or made some horrible mistake, or worse yet, because his partner did something dreadful, is certainly not doing himself any good, if he allows the incident to affect his subsequent play. Here is a hand where a cool head would do wonders in overcoming an exceptionally bad break. North jumped to six no-trump simply on the basis of point count. With 12 points facing a 22-24 point two notrump bid, the contract looked like a breeze. And it would have been if the diamond suit had broken normally. But when the club lead was won in dummy, and a low diamond played, East discarded a heart, and there was South suddenly confronted with the danger of going down in a hand which a moment before appeared to be a wrap-up. The unexpected turn of events proved to be more than he could cope with. He finessed the diamond queen and West took it and returned a club. Later, sad to relate, South misguessed the two-way spade finesse and ended going down one. Yet the contract was 100 per cent safe if declarer had given the matter calm consideration after East failed to follow to the first diamond lead. Hope of running the diamond suit obviously had to be abandoned. A different plan had to be adopted. South should take the diamond with the ace and return a low diamond. West cannot afford to take the king, and dummy's jack wins the trick. All that is now needed is to bring home three spade tricks without permitting West to take the lead. So a club is led to the ace and a low spade to the nine. The finesse happens to win, but win or lose, there are 12 ironclad tricks. It turns out, by luck, that declarer makes 13 tricks, but this is simply a reward for good behavior.

Nfld. Legislature Closes; Assent Given 2 Major Bills

ST. JOHN, Nfld., (CP) — The Newfoundland Legislature prorogued Wednesday after Lieutenant Governor Campbell McPherson gave royal assent to two major bills. One allows the government to float a $14,000,000 bond issue. The other gives the government permission to enter an agreement for construction of an $8,000,000 provincial building on which work has already started. The legislature opened in January and adjourned Feb. 21 without bringing down a budget — to await the outcome of the McNair royal commission which had investigated the financial consequences to Newfoundland of union with Canada. It was originally hoped sessions would resume shortly after the March 31 Federal Election. But the commission's report was delayed several times in the printing stage. It wasn't handed over to the Federal Government until August. Sessions resumed again Aug. 27. The next day Finance Minister Spencer brought down a budget that contained no surprises or tax changes. The budget estimated a current account expenditure of $59,325,000 for the financial year ending March 31, 1959, increased revenues of $74,140,000 and a deficit of about $2,000,000. There was on snag. The budget counted on getting at least $13,000,000 from the Federal Government on the recommendation of the McNair royal commission. Although Newfoundland had asked for $15,000,000 annually, the commission said the province would need $8,000,000 to keep public services at their present level. Regular transitional grants would be subtracted from this sum. Payments would start in 1957 giving the province a total of $13,000,000 this year. But the recommendations were not considered by Parliament. Prime Minister Diefenbaker said the matter "needed further study." The loan bill was passed to make up for the missing $13,000,000 in the budget. The money would pay for summer public works projects. EXPORTS CONTROVERSY The most controversial bill following the six-month recess was the one giving the government permission to enter an agreement with Whitney-Hanson, a Canadian-United States company, to build an $8,000,000 Provincial Building. Opposition Leader Hallett and his three Progressive Conservative colleagues objected because work began on the building while the legislature was recessed. They knew nothing about it until the Premier turned the first sod in mid-July. Foundation work now is almost completed. Premier Smallwood told them the government acted constitutionally. No agreements or commitments had been made with Whitney-Hanson. The company paid for the foundation work. The government will purchase the building from Whitney-Hanson on a "buy-back" scheme. It would cost the government about $700,000 a year for 25 years — total of about $17,500,000 — to become sole owners. Government departments now are scattered in about 16 different locations. By putting them under one roof the government would save about $200,000 a year on maintenance cost alone, the Premier said. The most controversial bill of the entire session received royal assent Feb. 21. Introduced by Premier Smallwood, it amended the Saturday Shops Closing Act to provide the fines of $200, $1,000 and $5,000. The amendment has yet to become law through proclamation. The present fines of $24, and $100 for first, second and third offences respectively are still in effect. The controversy started when the law, which says all retail and wholesale outlets must close on Saturday, went into effect Feb. 1. Many merchants said the government had no right to interfere with business. Another major bill passed Feb. 21 gave Crown Zellerbach Corporation of San Francisco permission to explore crown lands with a view to establishing a chemical pulp mill and a newsprint factory. They have two years to decide on the newsprint plant and 12 years to determine whether to establish the pulp mill. There are 32 Liberals and four progressive Conservatives in the 36-seat house.
