

The Valley of Silence.

But far on the deep there are billows That never shall break on the beach;
And I have heard songs in the silence That never shall float into speech;

MRS. CRAMPTON'S EXPERIMENTS.

Little Jane paused before a door on the third floor, and opening it entered.
At the sight of the loaves two children ran to meet her with exclamations of delight.

'O mother, Jenny has got some bread. Give me some won't you. I'm so hungry.'

'Heaven be praised!' exclaimed the mother. 'I could not bear to see my little ones hungry with nothing to give them.'

'Mother,' said Jane, 'this is the good lady that gave me the money to buy the bread. I didn't spend the whole.
There are sixty-five cents left.'

'Heaven bless you, madam!' said Mrs. Parish earnestly. 'But for your bounty these children would have had nothing to eat to-day.'

'Is it possible?' exclaimed Mrs.
Crampton in pain. 'I did not dream of such destitution.'

'It has been a hard winter for the poor,' said Mrs. Parish. 'We have willing hands but there was little to do.
We have been forced to remain idle, and see our children want.'

'He was a porter, but was discharged three months ago, and has not been able to obtain employment since. I have found a little sewing to do, but that has scarcely been sufficient to meet the rent. We had a few dollars saved, but those were exhausted a month ago.'

'I hope there are not many cases as bad as yours.'

'I wish there were not. But there is more than one in this very building.'

'Indeed! Tell me about them.'

'On the floor above live two sisters who have no resource except sewing, and that has just been taken away. I don't know what they will do. I heard them sobbing and walking the floor nearly all last night.'

'I will go up, and see them. But first take this for yourself.'

Mrs. Crampton drew out her purse, and taking from it a ten dollar bill, extended it towards Mrs. Parish.

'Ten dollars!' exclaimed the poor woman. 'Did you intend to give so much.'

'It will support us a fortnight. During that time something may happen.
God bless you, lady.'

'Something shall happen said Mrs.
Crampton. 'Here is my card. Tell your husband to call at my house tomorrow, and I will see what can be done for him.'

Mrs. Crampton, preceded by Jane, ascended to the next floor, and reached the door of the destitute sisters, just as one of them, pale and sorrow-stricken, was about coming out of it. Under her arm she carried a small bundle containing an article of dress, which she was about to carry to the pawnbroker's in the hope of raising a small sum upon. She paused in surprise at the sight of so elegant a lady in the miserable tenement house.

'Miss Benson, here is a lady to see you,' said Jane.

She turned, and courteously invited Mrs. Crampton to enter.

'It is a poor place for a lady like you,' she said.

'Don't think of apologizing,' replied Mrs. Crampton. 'You look as if you needed help. What can I do for you?'

'We do indeed need help,' said the poor girl. 'We are destitute.'

'Can you get no work?'

'We have sought it everywhere, but can obtain none.'

'Can you sew well?'

'It is the way in which we have earned our living.'

'Then listen to me. I mean to have some plain garments made up for distribution to the poor. There will be enough to keep you constantly employed for the present. You may come to my house to-morrow (here is my card) and receive directions.'

'Thank you a thousand times, madam.
It will save us from much misery.'

'Let me pay you a portion in advance,' and Mrs. Crampton drew out five dollars and handed them to the young woman. How gratefully and with what a sense of relief this was received may be imagined.

These two visits over, Mrs. Crampton returned home, no longer to a monotonous and tedious existence.
Life had all at once become bright for her. She began to have an object in life. In the afternoon she went out, and brought a large quantity of cheap material to be converted into garments, and the next morning was ready to give audience to pensioners. She resolved to let no week pass without some charitable calls, and adhered to her resolution. She is welcome in many homes, as an angel of charity and good works, and there are hundreds who are ready to shower blessings upon her head. Thus, in promoting the happiness. Her experiment was completely successful. Who will imitate her example?

Liver is King.

The liver is the imperial organ of the whole human system, as it controls the life, health and happiness of man. When it is disturbed in its proper action, all kinds of ailments are the natural result. The digestion of food, the movements of the heart and blood, the action of the brain and nervous system, are all immediately connected with the workings of the liver. It has been successfully proved that Green's August Flower is unequalled in curing all persons afflicted with dyspepsia or liver complaint, and all the numerous symptoms that result from an unhealthy condition of the liver and stomach. Sample bottles to try, 10 cents. Positively sold in all towns on the Western Continent. Three doses will prove that it is just what you want.
