Passengers Balk On Leaving Ship

NEW YORK (AP) - A little thing like a collision at sea didn't perturb passengers of the luxury liner Maasdam-until it hit them in the pocketbook.

And then... A typhoon was nothing compared to the storm the Maasdam's crew sailed into from furious passengers, angered when the damaged ship returned to port Sunday and they were told they would have to pay hotel bills.

More than 100 passengers went on a sit-down strike in the plush surroundings of a lounge on the promenade deck. Five hundred other passengers left quietly. The strikers said they had paid for their quarters aboard ship and they didn't see why they should get off and go to a hotel at their own expense.

PLEAD WITH PASSENGERS

In vain, officials of the Holland-America lines, operators of the Maasdam, pleaded that it is against sanitary regulations for passengers to live aboard ships in drydock.

And the Maasdam, her starboard bow damaged by a collision Saturday night with a French freighter out of Montreal, had to get along to drydock for repairs.

The dispute followed an announcement that the line would arrange hotel reservations in New York until another passage could be obtained-but that the passengers would have to pay the bills. Finally Holland-America surrendered. It offered to pay $20 sub-sistence for each adult and $10 for each child pending the sailing of the line's Ryndam Oct. 13.

Hours after the fias started, the Maasdam weighed anchor at Hoboken, N.J., and headed for repairs at a Brooklyn shipyard. It was reported there still were about 20 passengers holding out.

BLAMES FREIGHTER

The 15,000-ton Maasdam left Hoboken Saturday. Near Nantuxet lightship off Rhode Island, only 150 miles from port the Maasdam and the E. S. Tofev collided.

The movie-ironically, "Calamity Jane"-was playing at the time. Nobody was hurt.

The Maasdam's master, Capt. J. B. Van Gaart, blamed the collision on the freighter, saying it suddenly changed course.

Thinks Canada Lovely Country

LONDON (CP)-The Archbishop of Canterbury returned from Canada and the United States Monday and said: "Why a lot more people don't emigrate to Canada I can't think."

"It's such a lovely country and is on the edge of immense developments," said the archbishop, Dr. Geoffrey Fisher, who with his wife has completed a 12,000-mile trip which included the World Council of Churches at Evanston, Ill., and 25 days in western Canada. He said he met persons in Canada "who had emigrated 40 years ago and people who had gone out six months ago and all were as happy as they could be."

Montreal Girl Fast Becoming Top Interpreter

By DOREEN BEDARD Canadian Press Staff Writer

MONTREAL (CP) - A young Montreal girl took up the study of languages after setting out to learn medicine and science, is fast becoming one of the top Canadian interpreters. She is Andree Francoeur, a 23-year-old blond whose talents already have been recognized by the Quebec government. This week she leaves for Geneva to study at the School for Interpreters there on a $1,200 provincial scholarship.

Andree already is an expert in English and French. At present she is studying German and Spanish and hopes to add them to the list of mastered languages soon. But five years ago she hadn't given languages any consideration as a career.

When she graduated from Marle-de-France College here in 1949, she had made up her mind to study medicine. She enrolled at University of Montreal but after a year, her interest in medicine palled and she transferred to McGill University to study science.

It was until 1952 that she became interested in languages and registered for a new course offered at the University of Montreal - then the only advanced translation course at the university level in North America.

After completion of her course, she started working for groups that needed translators for their conventions. Among those whose speeches she has translated are former United States vice-president Alben Barkley and the former Lord mayor of London. In addition to her regular work, Andree has found time to start on a thesis on musical terminology. She is also compiling a glossary of terms used in the plumbing and heating business.

After completing a year's study in Geneva, Andree may go to Paris to work as an interpreter for a world brotherhood convention.

Delegates were welcomed by Finance Minister Gagnon and Mayor Wilfrid Hamel of Quebec.

Would Revise U. S. Workmen's Compensation

QUEBEC (CP) - An American doctor Monday called for drastic revision of workmen's compensation laws in the United States that allow disabled workers to get medical treatment only for limited periods and at limited cost.

Dr. Alexander P. Aitken, chairman of the sub-committee on industrial relations of the American College of Surgeons, said disabled workers should be fully paid not only for all medical treatment, but for job retraining needed to get them back to work.

Dr. Aitken was addressing delegates to the five-day, 40th annual convention of the International Association of Industrial Accident Boards and Commission meeting here for the first time.

The statements were included in an advance text of his speech. Dr. Aitken said the basic concept in an improved workmen's compensation system should be the return of injured workers to work. The settlement of accident cases on the basis of cash awards alone does not meet the needs of the workers and their families.

"No attempt is made to see that adequate medical care has been obtained, or that physical and vocational retraining services are procured when needed."

He said the American Surgeons' college sub-committee recommends that compensation services set up a panel of impartial medical experts to determine how much medical care an injured man needs, for how long a time he needs it, and whether or not he will need job retraining.

The cost of job retraining should be borne by industry or the state rehabilitation program, or both jointly, he said.

Earlier, association president Joachim Grenier of Quebec welcomed delegates to the convention. He said that between now and the new year, each state and Canadian provincial compensation board should compare its laws with the association's standards and amend them to conform with the standards if possible.

U. K. Millers Still Prefer Hard Canadian Wheat

LONDON (CP) - United Kingdom millers still prefer hard Canadian wheat, and thereby hang a considerable problem for the country's agriculture.

Demand and price for favorite Canadian wheats appear to be holding firm in the recently-freed U.K. grain markets despite the new harvest. Millers are paying 56 to 57 a ton-37 1-3 bushels-more for Canadian milling wheat than the best home-grown varieties.

British farmers, urged in the last few years to grow more of top produce, are dismayed at the top prices being offered them for wheat. These have ranged from 17 to 21 a ton and the government stands to pay heavily under the deficiency payments scheme which guarantees farmers 229 a ton.

The U.K. wheat harvest may exceed 53,000,000 bushels this year despite the wettest in 50 years, some estimates say. Yet prospects are that British millers will absorb only 3-5ths of the harvest-at prices only two-thirds of the guaranteed amount.

Canada's long-dominant position in the U.K. market, largest in the world, still is firmly fixed on U.K. milling demand for her hard, smooth-skinned wheat, high in protein content. This is the wheat producing the flour that British bakers like, and home-grown wheats can't compete. The alternative British market is for feed. As generally expected, Canadian wheat purchases perked up this summer when the last government-bought stores were dissipated in the markets, freed last year.
