

DECISION

Ian MacQuarrie, Biology
Chairman

My personal opinion is 'lukewarm'. I feel it is the people who make the system. However, it might cut into Science and Arts.

Peter Meincke, Pres of UPEI
(in case you didn't know)

I thought the level of the debate was excellent and that Senate was exploring the real issues of this University. I don't like to see issues decided by so close a vote, but in certain cases, there are two distinct sides to the issue and it's important to come to a resolution of the problem even if the vote is close. This issue has been absorbing a lot of time and effort of the University over the past year and it is of the utmost importance that we move on to other things.

P. Nagarajan, Economics

There are serious budget implications, both in the short run and the long run, and it will change the character of the university. The students are not going to benefit from this change in structure. Faculty members will be isolated more and more. There will be a reallocation of resources.

Brendan O'Grady, English
Chairman

I accept it. I don't agree with it, but I accept it.

Winston Pineau, Mathematics Chairman

I don't feel strongly one way or the other.

The fear that most people have is that Business Administration would grow at a large expense. These people are afraid that the other disciplines would suffer.

Estelle Reddin, Home
Economics Chairperson

It's a good idea to give it three years and then review the situation. We have good relations with Business Administration and that should not change.

J. Joseph Revell, Business Administration Chairman

I realized that the vote would be close, but I had not expected it to be quite so close.

It was obviously a good decision. Now it's time for all of us to get back to work for the good of the University as a whole.

It was a long and in some ways, mentally tiring for everyone close to the issue.

We now have a decision you have to work with, but even if a decision is close, that should not change the way we move ahead.

I was rather pleased with the quality of the debate on both sides of the issue. Specifically, it did not result in personal incriminations.

Andrew Robb-History Chairman

I supported it reluctantly. They would have been better advised to build a business program integrated with the sciences and humanities. In the final analysis, if people do not want to be in a faculty you cannot keep them there, so it's best to let them go and make the best of the situation.

Vern Smitheram, Philosophy
Chairman.

The issue was badly handled by the President from the beginning by taking it over the heads of the Faculty of Arts.

The dispute over the structures issue has distracted the University over the more important issue of implementing the general and honours degree structures approved by Senate years ago. These would have more significant bearing on the health of the University and students and would integrate the faculty much more significantly than the structural changes which have ended up dividing the university.

We should have been focusing on the academic life we can provide for the students, rather than tinkering with administrative structures which are unlikely to have any benefits for students.

Bert Tersteeg, Music
Chairman..

The whole thing has been blown out of proportion. Structures won't work if you don't want them to. We should be concerned with the philosophy of the place and not so much with the structures.

Right now, we have watered down the philosophy of the university enough and cannot do anymore or it will become a farce.

I am surprised at the
