An Ontario Templar's Visit to P. E. Island.

BY G. NO. 00.

I little thought that my visit to this section of the Dominion would settle a long disputed question of topography; but such evidently is the case. Our savants have for generations been vexing themselves as to the exact location of the Garden of Eden, and nearly all have a different theory. Little did I think the solution of the problem would be left to myself; but Eureka! I have found it. That Prince Edward Island is the original site, to my mind there can be no question, the Rev. Joseph Wild, D. D., to the contrary notwithstanding; and if I do not make out as good a case for the "tight little island" in the Gulf of the St. Lawrence, may my name never be enrolled among the prophets. The soil of the Island is of a clayey nature and quite red in color. This is not so in spots only, but is its universal characteristic. Now, when the Creator made the first man, he called him Adam because he was made out of the dust of the ground, and the name not only signifies dust or earth, but red earth; so one element of the proof of my proposition is undoubtedly present. Another reason, and that is, that for natural beauty, picturesque scenery and fertility of soil, it stands unequalled, or at any rate unexcelled, in the wide world; in fact a veritable Eden without the latter's discord and bog, a second England as far as cultivation and pastoral life is concerned, and last but not least, largely Scottish by settlement. Another fact is present, making my claim perfectly consistent with the record, and that is, it is down by the sea, or as the Indians called it "Island floating on the water." Now, we all know Adam and his wife were given for food, among other things, the "fish of the sea," and without their were within easy access of the latter, they would not know what, under the canopy of heaven, the articles were. Prince Edward Island is noted for the variety of fish in its waters, so that that element is also present to substantiate my claim. We have not, however, to be guided solely by abstract speculation in the matter, because it may be fairly reasoned that the original place of abode of the "father of all living" would retain some of the features of our ideal of Paradise. In one respect, at least, Prince Edward Island fills the bill in this regard, viz., it is the beau ideal of the politician's paradise. Fancy a country with a population less than that of Toronto, having a Lieut.-Governor with a salary of $7,000 per year, and a magnificent mansion and grounds thrown in. Then, so that the smaller fry may have fair show, and the Governor be assisted in his arduous duties, a House of Lords as well, or as it is called here, Legislative Council, every member of which, and all previous members, by-the-by, being entitled to be called "Honourable." Then this petite House of Lords being too "Honourable," or not honourable enough, the people have a House of Representatives, consisting of thirty members, a number of which may become Cabinet Ministers, and so; at once, another batch of "Honourables" is created, and is continually being increased with every change of Government. For a first-class, double-back action politician's paradise, commend one to Prince Edward Island. Nor are the positions merely one of barren honour, oh, no; the Island politicians, like the gens homo the world over, believe in pelf as well, and both M.L.C.s and M.P.s are paid by a grateful country for their services. Whether in this particular the people of the Island consider the system perfectly in consonance with the perfection of Government, deponent sayeth not; but what are the people, anyway? The place would also be a paradise, for a while, to one gentleman I know, viz., the iconoclastic editor of the Toronto News; I actually tremble when I think of what the effect would be if E. E. S. were to pay the Island a visit and give his free and unbiased opinion pari et similibus; either the Island or Sheppard would "bust," the two could not exist simultaneously, so perhaps it is as well he is not here. Prince Edward Island, is, however, richly endowed by Providence; a genial climate, fertile soil, and picturesque beauty, all combining to make it a very desirable place of residence. The farmers of the Province are comfortably housed, have good barns and outbuildings and the best and newest machinery for agricultural purposes. They have deposited in the Government Savings Bank over $2,000,000, and poverty seems to be comparatively unknown. A family can live for about one half the cost of living in Toronto, and the income which Ontario people only manage to exist upon, here would keep them in luxury. Many farmers have their boats, and fish can be procured both for immediate and winter use, with little difficulty, beside affording unlimited sport. The Island is also a paradise to the epicure. Its rivers abound with oysters, its pastures with mushrooms, it bays with lobsters, while the best of stock for table and export purposes is raised there. The horses of the Island are, like its potatoes, of continental reputation and find a ready market in the United States and adjoining provinces of the Dominion; in fact, almost everything necessary for the comforts of life is found within its territory. And still the Islanders are not happy. Like their great progenitor, Father "Red Earth," they are discontented, and they fancy the one thing needful to their complete enjoyment is a sub-marine tunnel across the Straits of Northumberland to the mainland of New Brunswick, and this people of 100,000 strong threaten to excommunicate the rest of the Dominion from a participation in their Eden without they get it. I am told the modern serpent which first suggested the idea was a certain Good Templar named Lord, the present G. Treas. of the G. L. of P. E. Island, now a resident of Eldon. However this may be, the idea, like the one in the original garden, seems to have taken root, and Senator Howlan is the recognized leader in the movement. Let us hope the outcome will not be so unfortunate, as was the acceptance of the first temptation to curiosity and ambition by the first inhabitants of the Island; i. e., if my theory is correct relative to locality. I leave the proposition now and claim my premises are as well sustained, if not better, than those of any other speculator on the subject, and if you don't feel like accepting the theory, why, all I can say is, come down here and see for yourself.

Temperance sentiment is strong in the province, the Scott Act being in force in every county. In Charlottetown, the capital, however, it is not strictly enforced, the fault being laid at the door of the City Council. The members of the latter are likely to find out how the citizens regard their action, or want of action, at the next municipal election. A fact of much significance and satisfaction to temperance men is this, that not only is the present Lieut. Governor of the Island a total abstainer, but he will not allow intoxicating liquors on his table. During my visit H. M. S. Belcherophon, with the Admiral of the British North American Squadron, paid a visit to Charlottetown. Rumor has it that the Admiral, a peer of the realm, by the way, cut his visit short because of there being no wine at his reception at Government House, and looked on the omission as a slight upon his dignity. Whether this is true or not I cannot say, but this I know, that before long there will be many slights of this character from one end to the other of this Dominion. Good Templar matters are booming here, the leaders all being in earnest.

Paganini.

In the Municipal Palace in Genoa, one of the birthplaces of Christopher Columbus—for he was born in three or four Italian towns, if local histories and traditions are to be credited—is the pet violin of the great Paganini, the fiddler who began where other artists left off, and ended only when he had vanquished art itself. Hector Berlioz says that, while Weber was a meteor, Paganini was a comet; and that his career was like that of a comet we have good reason to believe. At the age of eight he composed his first aria, and at nine gave his first concert, setting the musical audience wild over the manner in which he executed his variations to the Carmagnola. Henceforth, his career was one continuous triumph. Everywhere in Europe he was received with unbounded enthusiasm, and even the phlegmatic Germans became delirious with ecstasy as they listened to the wonderful results of his magic skill. The critics of the day spoke of him as of one inspired to the point of being supernatural. In his hands the violin was a whole orchestra; with it he commanded the whole range of natural sounds—the diapason of human passion. He exercised a strange and mysterious influence over the most distinguished of his fellow-artists. Rossini conceived for him a species of fascination not unmixed with awe; while Meyerbeer, entranced by his genius, sought in vain to fathom the mystery of his phenomenal power. "Imagine the most surprising effects it is possible to produce upon the violin," says Meyerbeer, "and Paganini will even then surpass your highest expectations." It was left for a single citizen of Vienna to solve the mystery which had baffled the skill of the world's greatest minstrel-masters of music. During one of Paganini's concerts in Vienna, the citizens distinctly saw the devil, horns, tail and all, standing behind the violist and directing his bow. As there had never been any evidence to refute the statement of the Viennese burgher, we have no right to doubt it, and must accept it as good ground for the theory that Paganini's cognomen was Nicolo, and that in facial characteristics he very strongly resembled the Old Boy as he is represented in standard portraiture. As he died suddenly, without the consent of the Church or the sanction of a priest, his remains were denied Christian burial, and for many years the body of the genius, who had been courted and knighted by sovereigns, and had filled the world with his fame, lay unburied in the cellar of the hospital at Nove. After a long and vexatious lawsuit his son obtained permission to bury the body in the villa of Gaiona.

To the Antiseptic Inhaler Co.

GENTLEMEN.—According to promise I write to inform you that your Inhaler has worked wonders in my case. I have only used it about two months and I find my difficulty entirely removed. I was troubled very much with a bronchial affection, accompanied with nasal catarrh which prevented me from singing—a part of my profession. I tried various nostrums without relief, until I heard of "Butcher's Antiseptic Inhaler" through a friend who had proved its efficacy. I shall do all in my power to recommend a remedy which, to my own knowledge, has been so beneficial in every case coming under my observation.

Yours truly,
JOHN HOWARD,
Prof. of Music.

Mr. Watson is Agent for the Inhaler, which can be seen at his Drug Store.

The Montreal Recorder has decided that the Salvation Army have a perfect right to parade the streets and sing.

A terrible fire. What a thrill of terror passes over us when we read the record of some fearful devastation by fire, and yet it is a fact that thousands are daily being consumed by the inward fire of fever, caused by consumption of the lungs, which could be subdued by Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery.

The melancholy days have come
Which make young men look blue,
Saloons display the double sign
Ice-cream and oysters, too.
