

MR. AND MRS. G. RUSSEL LEARD

50th Wedding Anniversary Of Fortune Cove Couple

Mr. and Mrs. G. R. Leard of Fortune Cove, prominent residents of West Prince County, recently celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of their marriage. Russell Leard and the former Clara Lockerby were married July 5, 1916 at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. H. R. Lockerby, Fortune Cove. The marriage ceremony was performed by Rev. George Millar, minister of Alberton Presbyterian Church. Their attendants were Pearl Lockerby and Erskine Lockerby, sister and brother of the bride. May Leard, (now Mrs. Artemas Cameron), only sister of the groom, played the wedding music.

The next day the young couple rose in time to drive five miles with horse and wagon to Alberton for the 5 a. m. train which would take them on a honeymoon trip to Charlottetown and Tryon. Much of the day was spent in Summerside waiting for another train which would take them on the second lap of the journey and bring them to their destination at midnight. As she recalled their wedding trip, Mrs. Leard remarked, "The young people don't realize what a blessing it is to have cars."

Mr. and Mrs. Leard have lived all their married life on a farm in Fortune Cove. They had a family of four sons, Kenneth, who lives next door to the old home, is employed with the Department of Agriculture. Rev. Earl Leard spent some years as a missionary in India and is now with Berkeley Studios in Toronto. LAC William Leard was killed in a plane crash in Labrador twenty-two years ago. The youngest son, Gordon, lives at home and operates the family farm. There are eight grand children. The three sons, with their wives and children, were present to share in the Golden Wedding celebration.

On Saturday evening Rev. and Mrs. Earl Leard entertained at a family dinner in the Western Hotel at Alberton. Following dinner there was a family celebration at home. At this time gifts from the family were presented. Rev. Earl Leard addressed his parents, on behalf of the family, and all the grandchildren had a share in making the presentations. They are Sylvia, Anna and Earl Leard, Billy and Kathy Leard, Alan and Susan Leard.

Mr. and Mrs. Leard were "at home" to their friends Tuesday afternoon and to their relatives and neighbours in the evening. They received amid a beautiful setting of seasonal flowers. Mrs. Leard wore a street length dress of silk jersey in shade of turquoise and a white, with corsage of golden yellow roses.

The table was centered with a three-tier anniversary cake, topped with a fiftieth anniversary wreath, and flanked on either side with tall golden tapers in birdseye maple holders. Reminiscent of a day when the chival was a part of every wedding celebration, a group of serenaders arrived during the early evening, wearing masks and clad in droll attire, beating out music on tin pans.

Later in the evening, John Rayner was spokesman for the community as he read an address to the honored couple. The presentation of a gift was made by James Wallace and Arthur Hudson, while flowers were presented to Mrs. Leard by Mrs. Arthur Hudson.

In addition to many individual gifts and cards, there were long distance messages of congratulation from Mr. and Mrs. James Hudson of Fredericton, N. B. the staff of Berkeley Studio, and Rev. David MacDonald, MP.

The guest book was circulated in the afternoon by Susan Leard and in the evening by Anna Leard.

Mr. and Mrs. Leard have always been highly esteemed residents of the community and their home a centre of hospitality and of Christian influence. Mr. Leard was active in organization of the O'Leary Co-operative and is a past president of its board of directors. He has also been an active member of the West Prince Liberal Association and was actively interested in the O'Leary Community Hospital. Brought up in the Methodist Church, he became a

ELLEN'S DIARY

The Mill Is Lovely Now With No Wheel Turning

This afternoon when current interests were beginning to fall from me, I went to the mill. The younger son of the house across the lane to visit the old mill in the low of this valley of the stream. To them it is a subject of much speculation. To James, it is a link with his pioneering forebears, while for us it revives scenes of the young years of the farm and farming.

"Now how shall we go?" Peter questioned. "The long way around by the road?"

"Let's try the shortcut," Alex suggested. "I think we can manage to cross the stream."

The front meadow is brimming with a loveliness of grass and clover and wild flower. At its foot, we came by way of a little evergreen grove, to cross on a lodged stick to the grassy and aldered islet which sits prettily near to cross the stream.

"We still have," we chuckled, "one more river to cross!"

"We can walk across on a overhanging branch - we've done it before," Alex said.

"I should have liked to see the mill-wheels turn, and the flour made. And the oatmeal," Alex offered presently.

And don't you wish you could have seen, and known the miller, your dad and uncle remember from their boyhood so well we queried.

He was a short stout man, strong, though commencing to age when our sons knew him. He always had a kind word and a puckish grin for children who chanced to come by. There were dustings of his trade on hat and jacket, and the eyes behind the old-time glasses twinkled insistently.

"Want me to weigh you off, like a bag of wheat? Need a big weight about two hundred pound, 'd say for you," he would invite, by the scales. Or in the sawing season, "See the horse that does our work," he would offer, nodding to the great chain drawing a log up "the slip" in the saw. "Strong" he would smile to them, though he never eats a bite of hay or oats - not a pick of it!"

The wonder of it is gone now. The mill a lonely place. The path to the half-door is overgrown with grasses, and bracken and alders are taking over the once smooth dam and the near end of the once shining pool. There is no sound of wagon wheels, nor horses' hoofs on the old millroad. No whisper of shop talk with cronies about. No jokes now exchanged there to recall in the long-after years.

"You don't remember that, Ellen!" James said recently when he recalled some incident of the mill and the milling.

"Because it was all so familiar, and the mill so necessary to our living we scarcely gave it a thought, thinking it would go on forever."

Now we know "nothing" abides. The years bring the changes. Once familiar sights and sounds vanish. Others replace them. Customs, ways of life and living, change unbelievably in less than a lifetime.

Yet still buttercups add their saffron yellow to the summer glory along the stream's banks. Fish hawks still haunt the place. Flickers tap in the neighborhood. The crane flies up from the river. Sunshine sets jewels in the ripples that come down beneath the bridges, pouring many and many a gallon of love since those young days, into river and stream.

"Ellen!" James calls into this twilight, from out of doors, "Come and hear the owl! It's a sort of lonesome sound to me."

Until tomorrow - - - Diary - - - Good-night.

Have you been hearing of the Women's Committee for 'Expo 67'? Maybe you've been wondering as to why a Women's Committee; the P. E. I. Women's Committee for Expo would like to tell a little about this - how the Women's Committee originated, and later on, the part women in this province have been asked to play in promoting Expo '67. The women of Canada have been asked to help and early this year, Women's Committees were set up in each of the ten provinces. Mrs. Louise Stuart, of Montreal, was named national co-ordinator for women's activities. The work of the Women's Committee is three-fold: to publicize, to personalize and to sell passports for Expo '67.

We have been asked to publicize and interpret Expo, as it is felt that women can do a better job of advertising Expo than any other means. We are reluctant to admit it, but we strongly suspect that the 'men folk' in planning for this gigantic exhibition have had in mind that old cliché that says that the three best methods of getting a message across are: telephone, telegraph, or tell a woman. It is most important that women and Canadians as a whole, should be aware of all that Expo has to offer. For example, we are told that many women visitors to the New York World Fair did not know that there was an excellent hospitality lounge to minister to their needs. And it is also of utmost importance that a women should know that an International Women's Day has been arranged for June 5th, 1967. Women across the country will be encouraged to participate in this event, when a number of outstanding women of the world will be present and will be honored. Women's national organizations across Canada are also encouraged to hold their own special 'Day' at Expo, when they will have the opportunity of highlighting their individual program.

Women will be helping their families plan ahead for a 1967 holiday - with many holidays in Montreal - sometime during the six-month period, April 28 October 27. All will have the opportunity of seeing and studying the culture and recreational activities of the exhibiting countries of the world; the opportunity to liberate "feel the pulse beat" of the people of the 70 participating nations from every corner of the globe.

Women have been asked to personalize and humanize Expo '67. Technically, Expo with all its mammoth plans could be a great success, and yet in human terms, a failure. It has been estimated that 10 million persons will visit this world exhibition, many of whom will visit other parts of our country before returning to their homeland. And who better than women can make our visitors feel at home? Courtesy and kindness will be the watchwords for '67, not only at Expo, but in our own individual communities.

The P. E. I. Women's Committee has been invited to share in the profits of advance sales of passports. To encourage the promotion and early sales, passport reduced prices up till July 31 of this year. There are so many things to tell of this exciting event Canada will be staging in Centennial Year, so please watch for this column next week, when we'll tell of the personnel of our local Women's Committee, and also bring more passport information.
