Very Becoming

s the invariable comment passed upon our Spectacles. The glasses look well, and their possessors look and see not only well but much better than they could without them. It is prudent to look well to your eyes, and correct at once any defect or peculiarity of vision by the use of properly fitted glasses that relieve the sight from being overstrained and impaired. The eye often needs the rest that glasses afford, and delay in the matter may entail serious consequences. It pays to save money, but it pays far better to save your sight. Besides Glasses, we also have some very handsome Opera Glasses that would make a nice present for Xmas.

AN ELOQUENT TRIBUTE

To the Late Sir John Thompson, by Judge Johnston, of Halifax.

In moving a resolution of regret at the death of Sir John Thompson, on behalf of the Nova Scotia Bar Society, Judge Johnston, of the County Court, Halifax, spoke as follows:

Mr. President, Gentlemen of the Bench and Members of the Bar Society:

Since coming into this room I was requested to move the resolution I hold in my hand, and though well aware that that duty might have been committed to abler hands, yet I did not deem that I ought to decline the honorable task imposed upon me.

Sir, this Society has met time and again to perform for members of the bench and bar offices similar to that which has called us together on this occasion.

Those of us who have passed the meridian of life can recall times when this Society has met to record their appreciation of learned judges who-e erudite knowledge of law and unsoiled ermine had made their decisions respected at home and abroad, and caused them to be received by the bar as exhaustive expositions of the law. This society has also met to mark their sense of the loss they had sustained when out of their ranks had fallen gentlemen of profound legal attainments whose legal lore, brilliant wit and exalted, fervid eloquence had ranked them as the peers of men practising in a forum larger than that contained within the bounds of the province of Nova Scotia.

But, sir, never within my recollection has this society convened to do honor to a brother member around him clustered memories at once so proud and so mournful. He whose loss we this day deplore was a man of high legal attainments, large intellectual powers, able to grasp and master any and every subject, no matter how abstruse. He was a genius, if by genius is meant an aptitude for untiring, unflagging work, for he was almost the only man I ever knew who seemed to love work for work's sake; a quiet, easy and effective speaker, it was a pleasure to listen to his forensic efforts at the bar, or when discussing questions of public interest, and he was withal a man who filled a large and conspicuous and foremost place in the eyes of this his native province and of this Dominion, but had won an enviable reputation in the mother country as well, and yet he is gone, struck down in his prime and ere his sun had reached its zenith. It will not do for us poor mortals to cavil at the decrees of a Providence that shapes the destinies of man, rough hew them how we will, and who holds the lives of the learned and the ignorant, the noble and the ignoble, in the hollow of its hand. But yet it is not forbidden us to mourn that one so gifted, and before whom opened possibilities so great and so far reaching, should have met a fate so sudden and so tragic.

Sir John Thompson commenced life at the foot of the ladder. I remembered him when a student with Henry Pryor, and many of you here recollect the small and dingy office in Bedford row in which he commenced the practice of his profession. But his legal abilities were soon discovered and his professional services eagerly sought. While at the bar he entered provincial politics and was appointed Attorney-General, and when the party he led was defeated at the polls, he made that very defeat a stepping stone from which to reach the judicial bench of this province, and that position he resigned in order to become minister of justice, with a seat in the cabinet, and ere long he was called to the post of prime minister of this Dominion, the highest office in the gift of the people of Canada. What more was there for an ambition, however insatiate, to grasp? Before him and just beyond him his eagle eye discerned a seat on the judicial bench of the privy council, the highest court in the realm, and the coveted, glittering prize seemed almost within his reach, but, as the noble bird who has obtained the topmost summit sees afar off a loftier crag and spreads its wings to reach the coveted height, when the stealthy marksman stays its upward flight. So ere he had more than stretched his pinions to gain the goal of his ambition, the silent arrow sped and quivered in his heart, and, fluttering, he fell to earth, and he who had been born in a lowly home died in the palace of his queen, and the royal lady, who had just previously sworn him as one of her privy councillors, was the first to drop a tear on his lifeless form and the first to place the floral chaplet wreath upon his casket.

And now for him life's fitful dream is o'er, and all his hopes, all his desires, all his struggles to come, and all his ambition lie buried in the dust, that ere long shall cover from sight all that is mortal of him. Sic transit gloria mundi.

But death itself might not rob him of his posthumous honor, for, by the mandate of his sovereign, his body will be borne across the ocean in one of Her Majesty's finest, swiftest warships—an honor that was, I believe, conferred but once before, when the remains of George Peabody were conveyed across the seas by the warships of three nations. This high and double compliment paid to Canada through her chieftain will surely not be forgotten by the sons of Acadia.

But one thing more I may mention—Sir John Thompson died a poor man. Yes, like the Hon. Joseph Howe and others that might be named, he died poor. And what higher, nobler, more enduring epitaph can be written in these degenerate days on the tomb of any public man than this, that he died poor in this world's goods, but rich in the love, the affection and the gratitude of his country?

And now what remains but that we, as we pass around his bier, taking a last look on Nova Scotia's most gifted and most successful son, and as we drop the tear of sympathy for the wife he has left a widow and for the children that are fatherless, softly whisper "Requiescat in pace."

NOT WHAT WE SAY, but what Hood's Sarsaparilla Does, that tells the story of its merit and success Remember HOOD'S CURES.

SOUTHPORT FERRY.

SIR,—In your issue of the 14th ult., there is a letter signed "Traveller," which I suppose is intended to be a reply to mine of the 11th, anent the Southport Ferry. But instead of refuting, he has corroborated every statement which I have made. In the first place he says that I made a groping attack on the ferry. Now, sir, in that very statement he tacitly admits the darkness prevailing in and about the ferry, for a person never grope about in the light, you know. Then in the next place, he says that the present party in power took away the electric lights. Well, now, that is my contention surely. I asked them to explain why they took away the lights and "Traveller" comes out as their spokesman, and says they took them away because they were proved to be a nuisance; at the coming in of the boat striking the side of the wharf the lights would immediately expire, Now, sir, if that proves anything at all it only proves that the light on the wing of the dock was not in the right place, and should have been placed a little further up on the solid wharf. By the way, does "Traveller," who has been about the ferry, as he says, for the last twenty years, and so very much about it for the last three years, know that that wharf is built solid? But why take away the lights which were not in anyway effected by the boat coming into the dock? Oh, he says, they too were a nuisance. Now, Mr. Editor, the people who have to cross the ferry want to know who proved these lights to be a nuisance. Was it the two hundred men who signed their names to the petition, or was it the travelling public who have to cross the ferry after dark the whole season through? No; it was neither. But because putting the electric lights on the wharf for the safety and convenience of the public travelling at night by the Southport ferry was altogether the work of the Conservative party, Peters, Cummiskey & Co. must deem them to be a nuisance, and perforce have them taken away.

Then "Traveller" goes on to say that some person whom he calls the writer, coming down to the boat under the luminous canopy of heaven, fell on the deck of the steamer and fractured his shin. And here he corroborates my statement again. Nothing but the stars shining overhead to show the way, is it any wonder that the man tripped and fell? No light on that dark and dismal wharf, except what shone down from the luminous canopy of heaven. Was it not providential that the steamer was lying in the dock at the time, and that falling on her ample deck saved him from going over into the cold icy waters of the river, in which latter event there would be now, in all human probability another family added to the list of those who are already mourning for the husband and father who left home in the morning full of life and hope, but whom that ferry has fated never to return Then, is it any wonder that the taxpayers, the electors of the Belfast and Fort Augustus Districts, as well as the public at large, are expressing their indignation at the way they are being treated in this matter by the present party in power, in that the very safeguards for their lives and property crossing the ferry at night have been so ruthlessly taken away.
