per?" another fairwife echoed our question the other day with a chuckle "It's mostly out of the garden now—and the orchard!"

Interesting visitors came by in recent days: busy farm-folks excusing, taking up as we with the cares and affairs of the occupation; pretty little misses of students now into the Fall-term at their High School; and on her birthday as it happened, a girlish lady now on, in her borrowed years, though you would never suspect it, so young in appearance and spirits she is. She is one who makes magic with plants and flowers, growing them—not for myself now, but mostly to give away to make someone else happy.

Nice scenes of the past she painted for us in word-pictures of Island schooldays with of the "nicest teacher" in a time of primitive desks and seats ranged about the walls; of the home with its spinning wheel and busy loom, and of that quaint era of living lost now in the years between.

The spinning wheel—how pleasant its sound! Like a lullaby it seemed to a tired child. Not unlike the drone of bees in the border on a lazy summer-afternoon, it was. Or the sound of the falling water at the spillways on the dam which comes up to us now in a gentle sleepy tune.

Until tomorrow—Diary—Good-night.

COCKROACH CLOCK
YORK, England (Reuters)—A woman scientist announced Friday that she has discovered why cockroaches run around at night. Dr. Janet Barker of Cambridge University said the insects have a "nervous clock" in their systems which controls their daily activity and tells them when it is night. She said she discovered the "nervous clock" by chilling part of the insect's body to retard its glandular balance, which itself acts as a "clock."
