debate on the financial terms of Confederation. The premier, back in his front-row seat after a Jamaica vacation and business trips to New York and London, said he understood Mr. Diefenbaker made a television address in which he pledged a review of Newfoundland's financial status in 1962.

Mr. Diefenbaker made a speech "of a conciliatory nature" and "appeared anxious to restore relations with this province," Premier Smallwood said. He added that he was sure members would say nothing that did not "show our appreciation" for the prime minister's statement. It was originally expected that Mr. Smallwood himself would lead the attack on the decision to commit Ottawa to special assistance for Newfoundland only until 1962.

COMMISSION'S PLAN
The $8,000,000 a year in new money, retroactive to 1957, was recommended by a royal commission set up under Term 29 of the 1949 terms of union. It was to review Newfoundland's financial position and recommend assistance adequate to keep public services at the 1957 level. The commission set no time limit on the assistance but Prime Minister Diefenbaker said the situation might be thinking about fighting. He labelled Gen. Douglas MacArthur far and away the best military leader that U.S. produced in the Second World War. He renewed his charge, made last year in his memoirs, that Eisenhower did not understand the Normandy battle plan.

Montgomery said the Soviet Union hasn't the slightest intention of attacking the West and that the West hasn't the slightest intention of attacking the East. He suggested that an all-out nuclear war is unlikely. He declared that any nation that goes in for nuclear weapons at the expense of conventional weapons is playing into the hands of the eastern bloc because minor struggles are going to be the thing in the next 10 years.

Montgomery called for a thinning out process by mutual agreement between East and West in Europe. This would involve, as he pictured it, a withdrawal of American and British forces from West Germany and of Russian forces from East Germany.

He indicated that he considers a major reorganization of NATO is necessary.

Montgomery also said that in 20 years time things may become would be reviewed at the end of the 1961-62 fiscal year. Newfoundland had asked for $15,000,000 a year.

Premier Smallwood ordered Newfoundland into mourning after Prime Minister Diefenbaker's announcement. He said the prime minister "betrayed" the province.

There has been speculation that his trip to London may have been connected with the dispute. The Confederation agreement between Canada and Newfoundland was ratified by the British Commons.

Efforts Tuesday by Progressive Conservative Opposition Leader Malcolm Hollett to find out what Mr. Smallwood did in New York and London were unsuccessful.

NOT IN PUBLIC INTEREST

He declined to say with whom he met and added that he did not consider it in the public interest to disclose "the nature of the discussions at this time."

The legislature resumed sittings Monday after a five-week recess. Still to be dealt with is the provincial budget, delayed pending an announcement from Ottawa about additional financial help.

awkward between the Russians and Communist China. He called for a summit conference and said a foreign ministers conference is unnecessary and unlikely to contribute anything to the success of a summit conference. He said it would not be a bad idea to hold a summit conference every six months.

Canuck Taste Is Developing

LONDON (CP)—A former Arctic fur trader says a distinctive Canadian taste is developing. "To meet it is a challenge for British industry," Lord Tweedsmuir said Tuesday in an address to a luncheon meeting in honor of a 36-man business and good-will mission sponsored by the Winnipeg Chamber of Commerce.

"It's different from our taste in Britain and different from tastes in the United States," said the son of one of Canada's governor-general.

Lord Tweedsmuir lived in Winnipeg for roughly six months in 1938 before he was posted to a trading post at Cape Dorset, Baffin Land, by the Hudson's Bay Company. He told the gathering of about 300 there are plenty of opportunities for British exporters to sell much more to Canada at present without harming Canadian manufacturers.

He suggested Britain should make a greater effort to get a bigger share of the Canadian market now being supplied by United States exporters.

Done in Winter

The remodeling of the Scotia II, if this course of action were taken, would be done next winter in order to convert her into a proper automobile ferry, in addition to her present railway car capacity.

Changes in shell and hull for this purpose, including construction of a new upper automobile deck could be done in time for the 1960 season at a cost of $1,500,000.

The changes would enable the Scotia to carry 80 cars, which the statement says "should cover growth of traffic for several years to come."

"The alternative," the statement adds, "would be to proceed at once with the preparation of plans for the construction of a completely new ferry, designed primarily, if not solely, for automobiles and trucks. This would cost probably twice as much as the reconstruction of the Scotia II and would take longer."

"It could not be available until the 1961 season at the earliest. Possibly this ship could be used as a standby vessel for use in other ferry operations elsewhere subsequently."
