MY HOME ON THE RANGE by Marguerite Wallace Kennedy; McClelland and Stewart; 341 pages.

This is the story of a real home on the range, and what a story! It begins with the author fresh out of Normal School, going to a new home in Arizona, and buoyed with the idea that she was going to have a school only a mile and a half away, and to get seventy-five dollars a month for teaching. She had a gay beginning, with a cowboy coming in to get her stubborn story working, and then all the glory of a country dance, she dressed in mail-order clothing. An older teacher told her how to get along in most places: "Conform to the setup of the place. I've knelt with Catholics, sat in with the Methodists, listened to the Rabbits, rolled with the Holy Rollers and waved my handkerchief at Evangelistic gatherings to signify I was saved. I've ridden a mule in Democratic parades and covered my bosom with Republican elephant buttons. Do as they do. They're all nice people."

The author was to find out that by and large her informant was right. All the folk had warm hearts and once you had dodged their pet likings and humored them, all was well. Then she started going with the big lad of the area, the Count of Monte Cristo, and her one-room desert schoolhouse became more bearable. The characteristics of the people are described with a frankness and humor and deft use of detail that makes the reader certain he could name the different adults if he saw them. Her efforts to raise a few tons of onions did not pan out as the book had said, but each experience was profitable in its way. The author was learning the ways of Arizona. It was sure from the start that she would marry the big boss, and she did, and from then on adventures are many and merry and the book is a catalogue of living that is just a bit different and a bit better than anything else of its sort that has come my way.

It is a book that can be read from any chapter and will stand reading and re-reading, as incorporating as Arizona air and spiced with cowboy sayings. I like it.

SWISS ENCHANTMENT by Monk Gibbon; British Book Service (Canada); 171 pages.

The author has written two volumes of poems, and three books that were Book Society Recommendations. There is no doubt about the quality of his writing, and his subject is one that has always been endowed with glamor. There are seventeen beautiful photographs in the book, showing snowfields, glaciers, lakes and other features that have made Switzerland so famous. Mr. Gibbon is one of those gifted persons who can travel and note every detail about him, who can extract the fuller enjoyment from any scenic gem or different people—and then pass on his experience for your information.

Writers have been describing the grandeur of the Alps and Switzerland for over one hundred years. There have been many books and countless articles dealing with mountain climbing. Beauty lovers have written much about the wild flowers of the Alps and of the beauty of lakes, sparkling blue, against the hills. Mr. Gibbon does not omit any of this but describes all with a careful phrasing that is refreshing, and then tells about the history of the country, the cultural background of the Swiss peoples. Few realize how long there have been cities on the Swiss plateau, and fewer realize that war has been waged on the hillsides for centuries before the Normans crossed to Britain.

I had not known of Solothurn, but if ever chance enables me to go there, I will make sure to spend a day in the city for it was known in A.D. 219, and was built by the Romans to protect a great bridge here. Two Christians were beheaded there in 303 and the Cathedral was built to commemorate their martyrdom. The Armoury there has the finest collection of armour and weapons in Switzerland, having 400 suits of armour, some of them magnificent.

Monk's book is filled with such information about cities and villages and mountains and customs, until a desire to visit Switzerland becomes dominant. For this is an unusually fine travel book.

Strange But True

By F. H. MacArthur

The power of a big flash of lightning, which lasts only about one thousandth of a second, is calculated at ten thousand million volts, compared with the usual 200-250 volts of household lighting. The job performed by a lightning flash is about 31000 kilowatt hours, or equal to lifting 500 tons 1,320 yards!

The Associated Press of the U. S. A. was organized by New York papers to forward European news, received by steamship at Halifax, to New York and Boston by express and pigeon pack.

The late Franklin D. Roosevelt was the only President of the United States to own a summer home in Canada.

We speak of the Western Hemisphere as the "New World." Actually, North America is a surprisingly Old World in the geological time-clock. Indeed, parts of this continent may embrace some of the oldest portions of the globe.

Before Adam and Eve dwelt in the garden of Eden and when the two Americans were still under water Acadian-Laurentian "islands" were possibly basking in the sun.

In the New Brunswick Museum, at Saint John's, you may see the skeleton of an elephant that was dug up on July 4, 1836, from the soil of Cape Breton.

And at New London, Prince Edward Island, the petrified jaw of an alligator was unearthed in sandstone many years ago. Certainly, these remains were not planted in the Maritimes by the hands of man. And the fact of their discovery in this part of the New World is proof enough of our lands antiquity.

300 soldiers died through exposure and hardship during the winter of 1775, when General Arnold's American force marched from Kennebec, Maine, to a fruitless siege of Quebec.

In more severe weather and covering a greater distance, starting Feb. 11, 1813, the 104th regiment 1000 strong, raised in New Brunswick, under command of Major Drummond, traveled from Saint John, N. B., to Quebec, in the amazing short time of 16 days, without the loss of a single man.

Believe it or not, but there are no records to show where the grave of Explorer John Cabot lies. Mr. has the North American Continent raised a national memorial to this dauntless sailor's mighty achievements. What is still more amazing no Cabot statue exists in the United States.

In the Bible we read of the potter who went down to the potter's house and "behold him wrought his work on the wheel." Yes, pottery is one of the oldest crafts in the world, and the potter still uses his wheel which is why our plates etc. are round.

It is, of course, possible for potters, by other means, to shape square cups and saucers, but if they use the wheel, the result will be a round dish.

The wheel may be worked by hand or by machinery. As it goes round the potter throws the clay upon it. While it rotates he shapes the inside of the clay with his hands, until it is the right shape. Then it is baked in a kiln and afterwards glazed, but its shape is fixed by the potter with his shaping tools while the wheel goes round.

turned to Mr. Hardy's old home on Prince Edward Island for a ten day vacation. While here they visited his sisters and their families in Stanhope, Suffolk, York, and Charlottetown. Their many friends have given them a loyal welcome. They leave on return Friday, October 26.
