ELLEN'S DIARY

By An Island Farmer's Wife

"And there was a great calm." So always end of week comes to us here on an Island farm. Not succeeding howling winds and mountainous waves come this tranquilly and peace, but after preceding days of farming that have been full.

Sunbeams clear and mellow and as sweet as the dewy farmlands along which they have come, steal in early to lattice a bedroom doorway which bring a message to James. Because all at once he wakes to whisper: "Ellen, the sun's high! It's quite time for us to be up!" Should he rise too soon to bring the cows in to the milking, what scenes he can discover in a leisurely stroll along the fields o' morning! A far field of clover that is "surprising"; a young heifer on pasture, "fair-good already" and "those roots—why you'd never believe how fast they have 'come'".

So these days blessed with every enchantment of summer in the new, commence. Swiftly the hours pass. Might as well try to grasp some of the gold of the beams that glorify the countryside as to stay one moment of these. Only in memory may we save the engaging pictures which too often un-noticed or regarded lightly, pass now in review for our pleasure.

We caught some ourselves as we went about our "for Sunday" duties; two lads of the place with a smallish new pail and pan attending with absorbing interests to the needs of their chicks this morning. Two who work as a team, the younger quick and knowing, often anticipating the wants of the older, without a word being spoken.

We saw them later, the sun warm on their heads, the light wind of day caressing the daisies about them, gathering ripened wild strawberries on a grassy bank of lane. And barefoot, scuffing the sand of roadway, returning from feeding the pet lamb in the corner field, beyond the lane-bridge and stream but still a part of the front meadow.

We watched with a smile and accelerated heart-beat at the magic of the scene before them, as Jamie, with a restraining hand on his brother's arm, they looked in quietly upon the sitting Goldfinch... and she apparently not alarmed at their presence, and the roses in a profusion of red bloom about.

And we saw the younger lad's eyes light up when he came to the kitchen this morning. Not altogether ready to begin his day he cuddled down in the embrace of the armchair... yawned sleepily and was silent. Then, "What day is this?" "Saturday" we replied.

DOROTHY DIX'S COLUMN

A Vicious Man Married Lover Of 14-Year-Old Hits New Low In Depravity

DEAR MISS DIX: Three years ago, when I was 14, I fell in love with a married man of 35. He said he loved me and would divorce his wife to marry me when I was old enough. Now I'm sure I'm old enough to get married, but he evades the subject every time I bring it up. Do you think he is sincere, and should I keep hoping?

ANSWER: The keeper of the nether regions should have a special corner reserved for married men who make a practice of winning the affections of teen-agers, causing untold heart-break and anguish to these youngsters.

Older women caught in the same situation are at least fully aware of what they can expect, but an inexperienced child has no conception of the villainy lying in wait for her. Young people are by nature trusting. It is by contact with the good and bad in life that we learn where to place confidence and where to withhold it.

Countless letters come to my desk from young people like this reader, who succumb to the attractions of older men with a fine line of being misunderstood as home and eager—oh, so eager—to get a divorce. Their protestations of affections, their empty promises are as false as a desert mirage. But how can a young girl, taking her first steps into a mendacious, adult world, recognize such consummate perfidy?

A girl who has had the benefit of a good upbringing and religious background might find it hard to resist the honied words of a suave Casanova; how much more difficult it is for a youngster lacking these advantages!

If I had but one message to give young girls, it would be to stay as far away as possible from men already married. Avoid them like the plague, and avoid also the inevitable heartache—sometimes disgrace—that follows these unholy friendships.

The most hollow promise in the world is the promise of a husband to divorce his wife in order to marry his innamorata. Young, innocent girls—as well as many older women who should be wiser—have spent fruitless, hopeless years waiting for such promises to be kept. When they finally realize that the path of love in their cases has been a path of destruction, they are embittered, disillusioned women who have nothing left in their hearts but the dead ashes of a sordid romance.

Don't let it happen to you, Meg. If you need further help, get it from your mother, a trusted teacher, your minister—anyone who will show you what lies ahead if you continue to love this despicable apology for a man who has no aim in life but the gratification of his own vanity.

DEAR MISS DIX: I am very self-conscious about my hair which my mother insists I keep long. All the other girls have short hair, but I am forbidden to have mine cut.

ANSWER: Long hair, this year, is just as popular as short, and surely you can find a becoming style with long tresses. Your mother probably has a sound reason for wanting your hair long and, although this is a point on which I think parents should let children decide for themselves, you can only accept the family verdict and make the best of it.

DEAR DOROTHY DIX: Two months ago I met a boy of 19—

That Body Of Yours

By James W. Barton, M.D.

FATIGUE

One of the commonest complaints for which a patient consults his physician is fatigue or tiredness. Formerly, the physician advised more rest and if he could find no cause for fatigue he sent the patient to his dentist, as infected teeth is one of the commonest causes of tiredness and sleepiness. If the dentist or other specialist could find no infection, the physician considered that the patient was working too hard or worrying too much and that a change would be helpful.

In Medical Clinics of North America, Drs. H. E. Harms and T. L. L. Sontag, Tulane University, state that chronic fatigue (being always tired) and lack of energy are among the commonest presenting complaints of patients. Calling the symptoms fatigue doesn't help the patient much, finding the cause of the fatigue often requires careful examination and study of the patient's complaints and also patient study of the personality or make-up of the patient himself. This is called the psychobiologic method of managing a patient with fatigue. The physician gets a flying start in his examination by the fact that it is generally estimated that 80 per cent of such patients (four of every five) are psychoneurotic or emotionally disturbed.

Unfortunately, as these two physicians point out, it is impossible to measure mental, emotional and physical fatigue by laboratory methods, although laboratory examinations are done as a routine matter. After severe illness, the patient will show a return to normal but a long convalescence is necessary before the person again feels well. Also, if the individual has a neurosis, it is going to take him longer to get rid of his fatigue. Pension, welfare and workmen's compensation physicians are well aware that "fatigue and lack of energy often do not represent disease of organs so much as they represent an emotional disorder involving the entire personality structure. Fatigue is a prominent symptom in many patients due to emotions such as boredom, homesickness, anxiety or emotional reaction to disturbing thoughts. It may represent the division or nervous energy into unhealthy channels such as worry and lack of proper motivation."

When the patient becomes tired too easily, Drs. Harms and Sontag state that the tiredness in an anxiety reaction. By not relaxing properly (mental, physical and emotional relaxation), such patients, because of chronic tension anxiety, "wear themselves out" and have the sensation of fatigue. In these anxious days, we must always remember that tenseness tires.

Consoling

A newly-married man found his wife in tears when he arrived home from business. "You know that cake I made from Mother's recipe?" she sobbed. "Well, I put it out to cool and the cat ate half of it."

May Be Lucky

A business man who owned a small sailing-boat invited a friend to go with him for a sail. A squall came up suddenly and the owner was pitched overboard. While he was struggling with the waves, his friend peered anxiously over the side of the boat and cried: "I say, Simon, if you don't come up for the third time, may I have the boat?"

Modern Etiquette

Q. Is it proper to open and display any presents that are received by a couple at the reception in honor of their Silver Wedding Anniversary?

Q. When a man is registering at a hotel for himself, his wife and two children is it all right to sign "Charles Nelson and Family"?

A. No; he should register his family, individually, as Charles Nelson; Chicago; Mrs. Nelson, Chicago; Charles Nelson, Jr., Chicago; and Mary Nelson, Chicago.

Q. Are individual salt-cellar and pepper-boxes used on tables at which formal dinners are served?

A. It is customary now in many homes for sets of large salt-and-pepper to be placed near the four corners of the table.

The Stars Say - -

For Tomorrow

THE excitement surrounding our national holiday, pyrotechnics and all, perhaps to the extent of abandonment and indulgence, is still in the air. Stimulus and excitement is in the map of the "heavens," where all mundane activities and urges find their nuclear inspiration.

With the major planets Pluto and Uranus particularly active at the present season, we pause to observe that the exciting names for atomic science and experiments have been filched from our astrological nomenclature, for example, plutonium, uranium and neptunium, boldly "adopted" by the dynamic science of atomic and radioactive energy.

Those whose birthday it is may find sensational stimulus in aligning themselves with the "powers that be" in the fields of scientific researchers in borrowing our planetary ideas, functions, and techniques as well. Avocations in the field of experimental science in which atoms and other cosmic bodies bear influence on our daily lives, should prove rewarding.

A child born on this day is sure to find his niche in these vast explorations and research of earth, sky and the celestial heavens or planetospheres.
