

as a great triumph to their "Party." When will poor Blunstone learn to judge of men by their acts, and not by the party to which they profess to belong?

It is useless to attempt to predict the fate of the present administration. It is scarcely to be denied that it possesses more talent than the last, or Uniaque administration; but it may not be any the stronger support. It is not to be understood that the great body of "Liberals" can give their support to the new government. For several years that "Party" has supported a Government, which consisted of men who combated the principles by the advocacy of which it first became a government. But although the men which composed that Government had no other understanding of the principles, the men themselves were the same; there was some ground for the supposition that "Liberals" Party" giving them their support. But now both the men and the principles are changed—essentially changed in all save the name, a mere arbitrary assumption. The present government, its members, its principles, its conduct, its system which so many of us once indignantly warred against as "Toryism."

Thus since the "memorable year 1837," the "Liberals" have been in the moving in a circle, and has now reached the point from which it started. Again notwithstanding the present appearance, brotherly conduct, and the agreement between the ex-Provincial Secretary and the ex-Speaker and his coteries, we can scarcely expect them cordially to agree with each other. Most of us understand how much reality there is in that apparent brotherly affection between the present and the late premier. We know the pressure, the necessity, the dictation which the ex-Provincial Secretary has had to submit to at the hands of some leading members of the new Cabinet; and we know how anxious he was to give a triumphal retreat before these, his ostensible friends, we have no reason to suppose either that they will ever be disagreeable to each other, or that they will give a very hearty support to each other. It would be no matter of surprise to us to see Mr. Howe, before very long, leading up to a resignation to the present Government. If we believed that the Government were the "liberal professions" which he once made, we should have no doubt of his going to a step.

We shall deal with this Government, as with the last, according to its acts, without regard to the previous party complexion, or party character, of its members. Since they bring to the Government, whatever may be the motives of the movers, or however inconsistent their conduct in doing so, such measures shall have our support, and we shall have but little faith in a Government formed in such a manner, and of such materials.—Acadian Recorder.
