THE SUN IS ALWAYS SHINING.
If storm clouds gather on life's way,
No use to fret about it.
In other climes the sun still shines!
"Twice foolishness to doubt it;
And though it be so dark that we
Can see no silver lining,
This truth we know, for it is so,
The sun is always shining.
And if the night falls dark and drear,
Take courage in believing
That morning light will soon appear;
There is no use in grieving,
And though sometimes we cannot see
"The cloud with silver lining."
We know 'tis true, in other climes,
Somewhere the sun is shining.
The orb of day sails on its way,
The storms are all below it;
It needs no sage to turn the page,
And read this truth—we know it!
Then, as we bear of life our share,
And try to cease repining;
This truth we know, through joy or woe,
God's sun is always shining.

SATIRA ANN.

Gabe, you're plum' simple about S'try Ann. As of good worsted, made up to home, wasn't good enough for her Sunday's best, that you must go and get her a silk and a mantle maker to cut and make it. In mine and your mother's days we didn't have such fine fixin's."

"But society makes more requirements now than it did then, Aunt Jimmie."
"It don't require paupers to be dressed in silk no more now, did it then, and it's not accordin' to fitness."
"You must not call Satira a pauper to me, Aunt 'Mime. You know she had a respectable boardin', and it's not her fault that she's poor and an orphan. When mother and me took her to raise a little, slim, big-eyed thing of ten—I promised her to be a partner to her, and I had no cause to regret all I've done for her, for she's been more to a daughter to me than mother. She's so kind and good that even the cats love her more than common."
"That's 'cause she gives them their eatin'. It's a sinful waste, the plates of good broken vittels she sets down to them cats."
"Aunt 'Mime, I think we can feed two cats off our table scraps without it bein' imputed any great extravagance, 'speed us if we didn't keep 'em. As for Satira, every brute critter on the place loves her."
"An' some that ain't brute critters too, I'm guessin'."
Gabe colored and gave his aunt a sidelong glance. She saw, but pretended not to, that he was a little bit of a frowner.

"How's her an' Luke Snell gettin' on? You've trigged her out so fine now I reckon he'll be poppin' the question pretty soon, for four some of the other fellows gets ahead of him; for it can't be gained that S'try Ann has plenty of admirers, but for my part I never could see any beauty in a complexion of chalk and cheese. Shouldn't wonder if she'd make a heap of doctor's expense for the man that marries her."
Satira has perfect health, aunt."
"No sign she'll always have; but if Luke wants to risk it I reckon he's able, an' it's none of our concern."
Gabe flushed again, and then turned pale to the tips of his fingers, all the blood in his being seeming to surge in one great wave about his heart.
"I must be going," said he, rising.
"Must I tell mother you'll be over to-morrow? She wanted special for you to come."
"Yes, I reckon."
"It's wonderful how Gabe sticks up for S'try Ann," said the aunt, as she looked after the retreating form of her nephew; "an' tain't for nothin' neither or I ain't my reckonin'." I wish Luke would marry her offhand an' get her out of the way, for I don't want my children knocked out of the prospect of inheritin' the best farm in the county by that little white-faced thing. Men's never too old to make fools of themselves, an' Gabe's only thirty."

Yes, only thirty; that was all, but he had been called "Old Gabe" so long that the idea of seniority had long since attached to him. He had not resented the appellation when, in his teens, it was first applied to him, but now, as he pursued his way along the meadow path, it impressed him with a keen sense of injustice.
"I wonder if Satira cares anything out of the common for Luke Snell," he went on thinking. "I'm not sure, but I don't see anything but friends till Aunt 'Mime set me on it to-day. It's plain she doesn't think of these being anything in line for a young girl to fancy. I wonder if she really has a suspicion of the state of my feelin's, and what she'd think if she had. Think me a fool, I reckon; which I am. Well, if it's to be Luke, I'll not stand in the way, and most of all, I'll never let Satira guess. She's more than life to me, and it'll be more than worth to give her a make no sign, but old Gabe can do it."

Wise Aunt 'Mime! She had counted not amiss on the effect her words would have on Gabe. She thought she had hit Satira's happiness depended on his silence, and he could do it and make no sign. "For, if she loves Luke, it would pain her kind little heart to know that I care," thought he, but a great surge of pain swept his being as he thought of the platitude of his affection he had lavished on his heart's idol; the personal adornments he so rejoiced to bestow, only the sooner to lose her because of the added attractions they gave her in the eyes of a younger and handsomer rival, but, having made his renunciation, it was the nature of the man that it be whole-souled, and therefore, did what he could to make, as he supposed, the waters of true love run smooth.

It soon became evident to him that Luke had a "more than common fancy" for Satira, and he did not stop to question for a moment that she returned the sentiment, so that he offered her by his own coldness and change of demeanor, he was unconscious of it, and Aunt Jimmie failed not to help along the illusion that it was as she supposed, "a sure case between the young folks."
"Why do you never get me to help you with your figgers any more?" Satira ventured timidly, one evening, when Gabe was struggling with several pages of accounts.
"I 'posed you wouldn't care to—now."
"Why now?" with an accent and a searching glance, but he avoided meeting her eyes. Dared he let her sit beside him, as in the olden time—some three months in reality, but years as reckoned by her—had he had to suffer—and risk the accidental touch of her little fingers, or her fluffy hair, perchance, against his cheek, as she bent over the ledger together?
"This once," love pleaded, ere he answered: "if you're sure you don't mind, I'd be proud to have you help me."
"If he's sure I don't mind. Why will he treat all my little kindnesses so cool, and as if he thought I didn't mean them! And he's done so much for me. Satira was as if all at once he's got set against me. Satira was thinking, as she went on mending, submitting, multiplying and dividing the pain in her forehead, little heart growing heavier and heavier as the slow minutes ticked away, for it was in vain that Gabriel tried to seem his own natural self, and in order to avoid "making a fool of himself," he assumed a coldness of demeanor that was chilling to her, so that it was with a utmost effort that she kept a steady voice as she went on.

"At last the effort became too much for her. "Nine and nine are eighteen and seven are twenty-five, with two to carry." She splashed down on the page and she could not see what came next.
Gabriel turned and took her face between his two hands, and for the first time in weeks looked squarely in her eyes, but the long lashes drooped, the blood mounted to her face and two more tears rolled slowly down her cheeks.
"What is it, Satira? Is it anything about Luke? Maybe old Gabe can make it right for you, if it's only a lovers' quarrel."
"Lover's nonsense! Bother Luke! I wish I never had seen him."
"Why, aren't you engaged to him, Satira?"
"No, I'm not."
"But you love him, don't you?"
"No, I never!"
"Do you love anyone, Satira?"
The flushed face drooped lower, but no answer came. He raised her face again.
"Satira, look at me."
For an instant only, the gray eyes unveiled themselves, but Gabriel saw in their depths which set his nerves thrilling.
"Satira, can it be possible that you love me?"
"Would it be so very wonderful if I did?"
"It would be a glimpse of the Delectable mountain, after wallopin' for ages in the Slough of Despond."
"There's some that deserve to stand plump on top of the Delectable mountain, for very good reason," answered Satira.
"Satira," there was a ring of pain in his voice, "do you love me for what I've done for you?"
"I love you because—just because I love you."
"And you do not think me old and ugly?"
"That was all she said, but there was a look in her eyes, a ring in her voice that satisfied him.
"Oh, Satira!" as his arms encircled her, "an hour ago I thought I was the most miserable of men; now I know I'm the happiest."
So Aunt 'Mime's heirs lost their prospect of "inheritin' the finest farm in the county" after all.—Good Housekeeping.

THE FATAL "FORTY-SIX."
The sad end of the English statesman, Lord Randolph Churchill, reminds us that he was 46 years old, the age which seems fatal to many intellects. Thomas Hood died at the age of 46, at the very moment when he had excited the greatest expectations. The fatality of this period of life for a certain class of intellects is nearly as great as that which has rendered the rank of artistic genius—to Raphael, to Mozart, to Burns, to Byron. Forty-six is the grand climax of the soldier's and the statesman's life. At 46 Pitt passed away in the prime of his powers. At 46 Napoleon lost the battle of Waterloo, and ended his career. At 46 Wellington won that battle, and may be said to have commenced his civil career. At 46 Nelson's hour had come at Trafalgar. At the same age the active and brilliant part of Lord Palmerston's career commenced at the Foreign Office, and Mr. Disraeli, exhibited his peculiarities as Minister. In literature we find that Spenser died at 46, Addison at 47, and Goldsmith at 46.

Aluminum in Billiard Balls.
A new substitute for ivory as the composition of billiard balls has been discovered in a combination of steel and aluminum, and according to the proprietor of a Chestnut street billiard room, this innovation will soon be introduced into the general of the billiard establishments of the city. The new composition will, of course, be much cheaper than ivory, and will be absolutely proof against chipping. The ease with which a draw or "english" could be imparted to the new composition is not known, but the general belief is that the balls will respond much quicker than the ivory ones. Old billiard enthusiasts place no confidence in the invention, but curiosity has attained such proportions that the popularity of the new balls would be assured, at least for a short time.—Philadelphia Record.

A Visit to the Works of the British North American Note Company.
OTTAWA, April 8.—A visit paid yesterday to the work of the British North American Bank Note Printing Company in whose employment is Mr. G. H. Kent, the report of whose recovery from Bright's disease with all its accompanying horrors of swollen limbs, convulsions, coma, and fearful pain, has been the cause of so much discussion in the city, showing that he is still in the enjoyment of the health which he has gained by the judicious use of Dodd's Kidney Pills. For a man who may be said to have lost his foot in the grave, and whose health is despaired of, he presented a remarkable picture of health and vigor, and pursued his work at the heavy press without any indication of weariness. He is loud in his praises of the remedy which cured him.
It is reported in Shanghai that the principal conditions of peace include the independence of Corea, payment of indemnity of 400,000,000 yen, and the cession to Japan of Formosa and Liao Tung, including Port Arthur. Within the memory of middle-aged people Consumption and other lung troubles were much more prevalent and fatal than they are to-day. The existing improvement in the public health in this respect is, in considerable measure, due to a more widespread appreciation of sanitary laws; but Putner's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil, with the Hypophosphites of Lime and Soda, and Pancreatin, may justly claim to be largely aided in the good work.
