FOUL PLAY.

By Charles Reade.

CHAPTER LI.

At this fearful insult Helen drew back from her father with a cry of dismay, and then moved toward Hazel with her hands extended, as if to guard him from another blow, and at the same time deprecate his resentment. But then she saw his dejected attitude; and she stood confounded, looking from one to the other.

"I knew him in a moment by his beard," said the General, coolly.

"Ah!" cried Helen, and stood transfixed. She gazed at Hazel and his beard with dilating eyes, and began to tremble.

Then she crept back to her father and held him tight; but still looked over her shoulder at Hazel with dilating eyes and paling cheek.

As for Hazel, his deportment all this time went far toward convicting him; he leaned against the side of the cave, and hung his head in silence; and his face was ashy pale. When General Rolleston saw his deep distress, and the sudden terror and repugnance the revelation seemed to create in his daughter's mind, he felt sorry he had gone so far, and said: "Well, well; it is not for me to judge you harshly; for you have laid me under a deep obligation; and, after all, I can see good reasons why you should conceal your name from other people. But you ought to have told my daughter the truth."

Helen interrupted him; or, rather, she seemed unconscious he was speaking. She had never for an instant taken her eyes off the culprit; and now she spoke to him: "Who and what are you, sir?"

"My name is Robert Penfold."

"Penfold! Seaton!" cried Helen. "Alias upon alias! And she turned to her father in despair; then to Hazel again. "Are you what papa says?"

"Oh, papa! papa!" cried Helen, "then there is no truth nor honesty in all the world! And she turned her back on Robert Penfold, and cried and sobbed upon her father's breast.

Oh, the amazement and anguish of that hour! The pure affection and reverence that would have blest a worthy man, wasted on a convict! Her heart's best treasures flung on a dunghill! This is a woman's greatest loss on earth. And Helen sank, and sobbed under it.

General Rolleston, whose own heart was fortified, took a shallow view of the situation; and, moreover, Helen's face was hidden on his bosom; and what he saw was Hazel's manly and intelligent countenance pale and dragged with agony and shame.

"Come, come," he said gently, "don't cry about it; it is not your fault; and don't be too hard on the man. You told me he had saved your life."

"Would he had not," said the sobbing girl.

"There, Seaton," said the General. "Now you see the consequences of deceit; it wipes out the deepest obligations." He resumed in a different tone, "But not with me. This is a woman; but I am a man, and know how a bad man could have abused the situation in which I found you two."

"Not worse than he has done," cried Helen.

"What do you tell me, girl!" said General Rolleston, beginning to tremble in his turn.

"What could he do worse than steal my esteem and veneration, and drag my heart's best feelings in the dirt! Oh, where—where can I ever look for a guide, instructed, and faithful friend after this! He seemed all truth; and he is all a lie: the world is all a lie: would I could leave it this moment!"

"This is all romantic nonsense," said General Rolleston, beginning to be angry. "You are a little fool, and in your innocence and ignorance you have no idea how well this young fellow has behaved on the whole. I tell you what—in spite of this one fault, I should like to shake him by the hand. I will, too; and then admonished him afterward."

"You shall not. You shall not," cried Helen, seizing him almost violently by the arm. "You take him by the hand! A monster! How dare you steal into my esteem! How dare you be a miracle of goodness, self-denial, learning, and every virtue that a lady might and thank God for, when all the time you are a vile convicted!"

"I'll thank you not to say that word," said Hazel, firmly.

"I'll call you what you are, if I choose, said Helen, defiantly. But for all that she did not do it. She said piteously, "What offense had I ever given you? What crime had I ever committed, that you must make me the victim of this diabolical deceit? Oh, sir, what powers of mind you have wasted to achieve this victory over a poor, unoffending girl! What was your motive? What good could come of it to you? He won't speak to me. He is not even penitent. Sullen and obstinate! He shall be taken to England, and well punished for it. Papa, it is your duty."

"Helen," said the General, "you ladies are rather too fond of hitting a man when he is down. And you speak daggers, as the saying is; and then wish you had bitten your tongue off sooner. You are my child, but you are also a British subject; and, if you charge me on my duty to take this man to England and have him imprisoned, I must. But, before you go that length, you had better hear the whole story."

"Sir," said Robert Penfold, quietly, "I will go back to prison this minute, if she wishes it."

"How dare you interrupt papa?" said Helen haughtily, but with a great sob.

Items from Souris.

Mr. Patrick Lyons departed this life a few days ago, and his remains were consigned to their last resting place on Saturday. He had been for a considerable time with Mr. John Keays; was a quiet, inoffensive, hard-working man, much respected by the many friends who attended his funeral.

The local branch of the Dominion Temperance Alliance, have shown a very conciliatory spirit towards the liquor traffic. It is all the more praiseworthy as the Alliance "held the reins" in every way. Although there is still some evidence that liquor is obtainable in Souris, yet there is every reason to believe that some who were formerly engaged in the business, have kept their pledged word like men, and ceased to sell liquors. No matter what old scores may be, the Alliance will not press them, on the conditions demanded being faithfully acceded to. There is no ill-feeling towards the men, but a thorough determination to enforce the law against the traffic. In the meantime the Alliance will remain ever watchful, and they already know there is still further work for them to do.

A lively and well attended Temperance Meeting took place at Bay Fortune last Thursday evening. John A. Dingwell Esq. occupied the chair. Short addresses were delivered by the Rev. J. G. Cameron, Messrs. J. R. Coffin, James Lutes, L. Brahan, J. Davis, J. A. Maskell, H. Campbell, J. Wigmore, J. Francis, J. A. Morson, and others. The choir rendered several favorite pieces in good style, and Miss Needham recited "The Badge of Blue," in a feeling and telling manner, eliciting hearty applause. It was quite evident that temperance principles have gained firmly in the affections of the people. At the close of the meeting a hearty vote of thanks was given to the chairman. We hope the good work will go on and prosper.

"We rejoice with Prince County in her glorious temperance victory," were the words flashed over the wire on last Friday, to Summerside from the Souris Temperance Alliance; and we do heartily rejoice. Prince County has spoken out well and nobly. The victory is a grand one in many respects, and if the temperance men of Prince County follow it up boldly, their triumph will be complete and crushing, crowned with absolute victory on all points. The Press did its share of the work, too—the Summerside Pioneer will henceforth have a home in the hearts of all temperance men and women; in fact it is something to the credit of the Island Press that there is only one journal in this Province which advocated the granting of licenses to one of the greatest curses the world has ever suffered from since God stretched the heavens over the earth.

Friends of temperance will remember that our next public Alliance meeting takes place on Wednesday evening, the 13th instant.
