CAMP OVER—The 1st Battalion P. E. I. Infantry broke camp yesterday and the out of town detachments entrained for home, the other troops in camp having preceded them by a day. The weather this year was ideal for camping, there being only one or two wet days. All regretted that the camping time was so short, as another week's training would have certainly increased the efficiency which, however, was very satisfactory under the circumstances.

THE CONFEDERATION CONFERENCE AT CHARLOTTETOWN IN 1864
The agitation in favour of Canadian Confederation, began as early as 1838, in that year Lord Durham, Governor General of Upper and Lower Canada, in a report to the Home Government recommended a union of all the provinces as a remedy for many of the existing evils. But some years passed before the matter was given much serious consideration. The need for a union of some sort felt itself, little by little, upon the minds of far-seeing Canadian statesmen. The people of Upper and Lower Canada believed that a union of all the provinces of British North America would best serve interests of the whole country. In the Maritime Provinces, the case was different. The vastness of the question and the uncertainty of the effects of a union with the two Canada's caused many of the statesmen of those provinces to view the proposed confederation with indifference, if not, indeed, with distrust. Yet a union of some sort must be effected. The Governments of the Maritime Provinces, accordingly, confined their efforts to bringing about an alliance among themselves. To that end the Legislatures authorized their respective Governments to hold a conference at Charlottetown in 1864. Five delegates were chosen from each of the three provinces. These assembled in this city on the first day of September in the same year.

But the fifteen were not to confine the discussion to affairs of the Maritime Provinces. The coalition Government of the two Canadas felt that this occasion was opportune to press for the larger union. Six of the chief ministers of this Government were consequently, appointed and sent to Charlottetown, having been assured of admittance to the Conference. These delegates were hospitably received and invited to express their opinions.

The delegates, thus assembled, were of different parties, races, and religions. Nova Scotia's delegation was chiefly Conservative, a Conservative Government being at that time in power there, led by Doctor Tupper. One of its members, however, was a distinguished Liberal, Adams G. Archibald, New Brunswick's was a Liberal delegation, its chief being Hon. S. L. Tilley, leader of the New Brunswick government. The delegation, from Prince Edward Island consisted of the leading members of the provincial government, a government which had carried important reforms in the Island province. It was led by the premier, Colonel Grey. Thus it will be seen that this conference was an affair not of party, but of patriotism. The delegates from Upper and Lower Canada were equally representative. There were the old rivals, now allied to so great an end, George Brown and John A. McDaniel, there were George Cartier, the French Catholic, A. T. Darcy, the English Protestant and William MacDoughall, the Scotch Protestant.

When these delegates from Upper and Lower Canada met, the Conference, they were so enthusiastic over the plan for the larger Confederation that the smaller union paled into insignificance. But the Maritime delegates had been sent to discuss only Maritime union. Consequently, nothing was done, but weigh interests and cultivate mutual trust and esteem. It was decided to hold another conference at once to consider terms of confederation. Quebec was the appointed place of meeting and the Charlottetown Conference was dissolved. It may thus be seen that the Island capital has a just claim to be called the cradle of our union.

The immediate result, then, of this Charlottetown meeting was the holding of a similar conference in Quebec city. On October 10th, the men who were to fashion a nation out of our scattered colonies came together in that ancient capital. These "Fathers of Confederation" were thirty-three in number. Their deliberations lasted eighteen days and resulted in the adoption of Seventy-two Resolutions, the famous "Quebec Resolutions," which form the basis of our Canadian Constitution.

Some time passed before all the provinces concerned could see fit to accept the proposed scheme. But little by little, as the subject was more and more threshed out and understood, it was seen to be the simplest remedy for existing grievances. Accordingly, Upper and Lower Canada, Quebec and New Brunswick, decided to enter Confederation and in February, 1867, sent delegates to England to get an Act of Union through the Imperial Parliament. This purpose was accomplished. An act which embodied the "Quebec Resolutions" and which was known as "The British North America Act," united these four provinces and made provision whereby other provinces might enter the Union. This act received the Queen's signature on the 26th, 1867, and came into force on July 1st. of the same year.

The Royal Game
Amongst the interesting events during their visit of H. M. S. Raleigh to this port was a series of contests between some select members of the War Ship's Chess Club and the Charlottetown Chess Club. The Royal Game, as it is called, is an established institution on board whereon they have a club of fifty or sixty players, a number of whom visited the Social Room of the Board of Trade looking for conquests.

The visiting chessmen consisted of Messrs. Farrfield, L. S. Rance, E. R. A.; Bottomley, L. D. R., H. R. A.; Turner, E. A.; Hyndall, E. R. A.; and Tibbles, P. O., while Messrs. Dr. Ross, R. E., Mutch, T. B., Woodman, L. P., Tanton, L. C., Worthay, A. S., McLeod, Wallace Higgins, H. J., Phillips and E. S. Coffin defended the local reputation. The city club, which of late has been slightly disorganized, was literally upon the defensive as they were up against some certainly strong players. Mr. Farrfield, the "daddy of them all" in chess manoeuvres, has had a big practice, having played with several of the world's champions on occasional occasions. As an expert player he soon detected the admiration if not the fear of our best players. Oldham, Olsen and Bassler, Manion. This first engagement was with the "Tantonian Horse" in the initial game of which the discovery was made that we were up against genuinely "hot stuff" and in which St. Louis

he scored an easy victory. After that the contest became more determined and Mr. Tanton succeeded in wrestling four out of the eight remaining games played. Dr. Ross met Mr. Farrfield in a less number of games but with better success having won the first game and tied his strong opponent on the second, evening by scores of one and one, or two out of three games played. Dr. Ross also scored equal honors in a game and game contest with another strong player, Mr. Woodman played only one game with Mr. Farrfield in which he was the victor.

Amongst the other players, Mr. Worthay played three games with electrical engineer Rance, whose voltaic force was not sufficient to overcome our the conflict with a two to one score in his favor. Mr. R. E. Mutch was similarly successful winning two out of four games from one of the strongest of the marine players. The other visiting players were engaged by Messrs. S. A. McLeod, Wallace Higgins, H. J. Phillips and E. S. Coffin, who are the younger and less practiced members of the city club, although after most creditable efforts in defense, were obliged to bend to the greater skill of their more practiced opponents and concede to them the preponderance of wins.

The engagements, which continued for several evenings during the stay of the Mar. Ship in our harbor, were interesting and of the most friendly character. The officers and men of the ship were as a rule full of social good will as they were of skill in the handling of bishops and pawns and they left with mutual regrets that their stay was not longer and with the hope that on some future occasion there may be an opportunity of renewing this season of pleasure and intellectual entertainment. The Chess Club and other members of the Board of Trade presented gave them a most cordial welcome and made them to feel thoroughly at home in their social rooms.

"A little knowledge is a dangerous thing"—but the redeeming feature is that generally a little knowledge leads to study, and the little soon becomes a great deal. And so it is with our Matchless Blend of Ceylon Tea. A little knowledge of its goodness leads to a trial, and then you've learned that real good tea can be had at a moderate price. We know that your verdict will be the same as that of the housewives who have used it steadily for thirty years.
