

Dear Editor,

Welcome back to our tight little society here on the university campus where the only freedom the students have is freedom of press. Thank God we can at least express ourselves in the CADRE. Of course so many students feel it's useless to bother talking and getting upset over things they can't change, that they feel it's a waste of time to sit down and write a complaint in the campus newspaper. However, I know you must have a sympathetic and understanding ear so I will not be afraid to tell you my troubles.

My troubles are, in a general statement, that everything is being run this year, as usual, by a few elites for a few elites. It makes me sick.

A very small but highly annoying example is the following tale of woe which I am about to relate.

Thursday night three students decided they'd like to go to the Pig n' Whistle to tie one on. I unfortunately, was one of them. We were bluntly denied entrance by a very discourteous campus cop who is obviously on a power trip. He told us that the capacity of 750 was already filled. Well, his attitude was bad enough, but his inefficiency as door man was even worse. What I would like to ask the Student Union is this: Why haven't you hired campus police that will make sure U.P.E.I. students are admitted to the Pig n' Whistles ahead of Holland College, P.V.I., Colonel Gray and Charlottetown Rural students - to say nothing of all the minors that are admitted weekly? Approximately 1700 people paid high Student Union fees this year. 1700 people are being cheated out of facilities that they support. Unfortunately almost all of them don't really care. It's a bloody shame that young adults in 1974, in a supposedly democratic country on a supposedly democratic campus, can let themselves be led like a herd of cattle and treated with even less respect.

The whole subject of campus politics and government disgusts me since it is such a farce. So I am going to make only one appeal: If the Student Union isn't going to shape up and see that students are allowed to exercise their rights, then the students themselves, who have power in numbers at least, must begin this semester with a firm resolution that they will demand their rights a little more strongly. By the way, if verbal means are not enough, there are other ways.

Dear Editor,

I enjoyed your article on the parking lots immensely but the only real heart-ache is in theory (thank goodness!!). That vital pink slip doesn't scare too many visitors and I haven't seen line-ups of students over at the Business Office handing over hard cash for their misdeameanors. In other words, if you get into a visitors parking lot and escape unnoticed from your car, the only grief you experience is the removal and disposal of the ticket.

Among those strewn over campus I have even seen some in the paper airplane shape. Do you students out there realize those tickets (cum airplanes) are contributing to your awareness of physics?

Well, anyhow, you get the idea. It's too bad somebody wouldn't clean up the act a bit. Those $X cheques did not buy them a piece of pavement. And no one can say that students don't have business on campus - it wouldn't last long without them (or their money, the latter seeming to be more important). I paid my taxes to support this place just like any business man downtown and what I've seen of some of those who do come out to U.P.E.I. on "business", I'd say they need the exercise walking up from the back parking lots a whole lot worse than I do!

Yours truly,
Marilyn MacPherson

Dear Editor,

After reading the paper (Sept 24) I noticed three particular articles that each had a pertinent beef to point out to the reading public; the editorial on the library check-out system, Kampus Koncern on the Visitors Parking problem, and Fred von Dreger's brief on Second Class Citizens in Air Travel. I agreed with all three articles and the arguments presented but what really bugs me is the fact that lots of people complain about the present system and that's as far as it goes. We complain verbally to our peers, we write and speak about it through our media but we never force the issue any further. I'm probably as bad as the next person for being an outstanding member of the silent majority. I would really like to see the Student Union take up some of these causes instead of always looking for new ways to run a Pig n' Whistle. Students need to gain back the respect they once had and this might be a good way of starting. I would certainly give my support to this sort of endeavour.

Vice-President of the Silent Majority
