CONCERNING BRITISH RULE.

It is pointed out by an exchange that the agitation which the Boer envoys are maintaining in the United States is likely to have an effect contrary to that intended. At a meeting of welcome to the delegates held in Minneapolis recently, resolutions were adopted exhorting the Boers to maintain their hopeless struggle. This was followed by an editorial in the Minneapolis Times, which has shown marked sympathy for the South African republics, from which the following, that must serve to correct the pro-Boer perspective of British rule, is clipped:

"In sober truth these resolutions do more honor to the hearts than to the heads of those who voted for them. There is no doubt that Americans generally sympathize with the Boers and wish that the outcome of their gallant fight might have been different. But everybody should know now that their cause is lost beyond praying for. It is fated that the South African republics are to come under the colonial system of Great Britain. Nothing which may be spoken in St. Paul can prevent it. To exhort the Boers to continue the hopeless war can hardly be the part of true friendship. It is equivalent to urging them to court utter annihilation. This the Boers can hardly afford to do, even though their sympathizers here may believe in sacrificing everything for a principle.

"The case would be different if the cause of human liberty in South Africa really were at stake. But even those who most earnestly feel that the Boers ought to have won must admit that England is not in the habit of enslaving the people of her colonies. There is a grain of comfort in the reflection that while the absolute independence of the Boer republics will be destroyed, their people will not be deprived of their freedom. Indeed, it is more than probable that not only the Outlanders, but a majority of the Boers themselves, will be given in some respects, more freedom than they have had these twenty years. The republics will become British colonies, but their government will be more republican than it has been heretofore. Great Britain does not establish a despotism in her colonial dependencies. On the contrary, she has consistently followed the principle of making them self-governing. Her present policy is to give the fullest measure of civil liberty to their people. She applies republican principles and allows her colonies the widest latitude in their efforts to work out their own salvation."

THE BOER COLLAPSE

AND CHINA.

The dismissal of the Natal volunteers by General Buller, indicates that the British Generals deem the need of a crushing force in the Transvaal part of Kruger's mobile capital and a moving command may keep out of traps for quite a time, and may even set up a sort of government amidst the hills in the back country; but there are no more "rivers to cross" of the character of the Tugela and the Modder. Organized military resistance appears to be well-nigh over; and the time has almost come when the British can locate their garrison of occupation and await the submission of the Boers.

This means that Britain will have troops to spare for any difficulties in China; and likewise that she will have them half-way there. It is impossible as yet to measure the amount of Chinese force lying behind the dust cloud which envelops Peking. But if it is only Chinese force, there will not be much to bring disquiet to Europe. The Concert can restore order if it will only play the same selection with patience and persistence. The danger is that the Concert will go to pieces in the face of what may look like Chinese disintegration. If this affair, however, results in the permanent quieting of China and the firm seating in the capital of a strong capable government, able to implement promises of trade privileges given to foreigners, the Chinese question may be pushed so far into the future that it will never come up in an acute form at all. Give China strength to protect her shores from invasion and an organization which will provide the people with the blessings of trade with the world, and she will have nothing to fear save reaction.

But in any event it will be well for Britain to have her hands measurably free for whatever duty falls to her lot in this matter. Her rights and her desire for the integrity of China will meet with more respect for the fact that she has an army ready and not too far away. The presence of American and Japanese troops will likewise be influences strengthening the British policy of asking trade connections and nothing more; and it will be with more interest than anxiety that the British people will watch the clearing away of the cloud of mystery now shrouding the Chinese capital—Montreal Star.

ADDRESS TO REV. DR. MURPHY

By the Benevolent Irish Society of Emerald.

Sunday, June 17th, 1900, will long be remembered by the congregation of St. Malachi's Church, being the occasion of the celebration of High Mass in his native parish by Rev. John T. Murphy, the first of Kinkora's sons to be raised to the holy dignity of the priesthood. The congregation was unusually large. The occasion, moreover, which was the more auspicious from the fact that it was "Procession Sunday" was taken advantage of by the Emerald Branch of B. I. S., who assembled to honor the talented son of one of their brother members and to unite with the people of Kinkora in extending their congratulations to him on his safe return after a brilliant and successful course in the "Eternal City." Upwards of forty of the members of the Emerald Branch, B. I. S. in regalia, met near the church grounds and marched to the church, carrying their beautiful new banner, where they assisted at the imposing and solemn ceremonies of the day. At the close of the service, Mr. P. F. Hughes, secretary of the B. I. S., stepped forward and presented Dr. Murphy with an address of welcome. It is unnecessary to state that this was a complete surprise to the rev. gentleman and during its delivery he was visibly affected.

His reply, which was an eloquent effort, and delighted the vast congregation, showed clearly that the B. I. S., Emerald, and the congregation of Kinkora have held and will continue to hold a warm place in his heart. He referred in glowing terms to reminiscences of his boyhood and to the associations which connected him by such strong ties to the kind people of these two sections. In conclusion he gave them his benediction. The following is the

ADDRESS.

To the Reverend John T. Murphy:

REVEREND DEAR FATHER,—The Benevolent Irish Society of Emerald gladly embraces this earliest opportunity of congratulating you on your elevation to the high dignity of the priesthood and welcomes you home to your native parish after a long sojourn in the Eternal City. A son of one of our members, and connected by ties of blood and friendship with many others, it appears to us that our presence here today, on the auspicious occasion of your first mass amongst us, will not be regarded as an intrusion but will be taken purely in the sense of our pleasure at your return home after a successful course of studies abroad prosecuted with honors and after having attained the high rank of a priest in God's Holy Church.

We need not say that it is a source of great gratification to us to see in your worthy person the first son of St. Malachi's parish to be raised to the high office you fill, and we are perfectly well persuaded that your future career in this high and noble calling of ministering at God's altar and winning souls to Christ will be such as cannot fail to increase the pride we feel to-day in assisting at your first ministration here. It affords us the liveliest satisfaction to see a son of our own people—whose fathers were obliged to relinquish their native Ireland and under great difficulties hew out for themselves a home in a strange land—preferred to so elevated a position; and we are tempted to hope that you having first of all Kinkora's sons scaled its heights—many others of our good virtuous young men may as years increase, God willing, follow in your footsteps. An association formally banded together for the fostering and forwarding of Irish interests we are encouraged and comforted by your presence here to-day and the lesson which it so strikingly teaches to every one of us.

Of course we know full well that the priest of God knows neither class nor nationality in the discharge of those duties which his holy office imposes, since he has been commissioned to go forth to all nations and be all things to all of them. But apart from the proper conception of those sacred duties and responsibilities, there is a place in the Heart of man, put there by his Creator, which warms to his own people and nation, and the more ardent the impulses which the feelings arising hence may be, the tenderer and stronger the love which wells up within him for the land of his adoption and all its noble aims and aspirations. May we be ever faithful to dear old Ireland's hallowed memories, and in the test sense be true to this grand Canada of ours, in which our lots are cast in lines so pleasant.

We are perfectly convinced that in all those objects which make for the elevation of religion, the spread of morality and the betterment of the country, you will take a zealous part, and whilst your efforts may not be confined to any one section or people, we make bold to ask you to keep your own native Kinkora and old friends ever in your heart. On our part, we shall consider you as ours by a multitude of sacred ties, and shall ever rejoice to see your career perfect itself in the performance of all those good works which make men of your calling a blessing to the land they live in. For ourselves and our families we ask your first blessing, which we always hope to merit, whilst our prayers shall often ascend to our Father who is in Heaven in humble petition for all the particular graces you stand in need of to worthily fulfil the exalted duties of the priesthood.

Again protesting our joy at seeing you ascend God's altar, our devotion to your person and office, and our best wishes for your future, we beg to subscribe ourselves, on behalf of Emerald Branch, Benevolent Irish Society,

GEO. R. McMAHON, Pres.
P. F. HUGHES, Sec'y.
