orted a sharp increase in the common cold. All this because we forgot to wipe the snow off our boots.

I hope the Student Services will see that they have improved one service at the expense of a valuable student feeling, warmth. I hope that the powers that be will see the errors of their ways and initiate immediate plans to create a subway system that will eliminate this nasty epidemic of frostbite that is expected in the next few weeks.

Frigidly yours,

Dear ed:

We are writing in protest to the prophylactic advertisements which appear in the Sun.

Not only do these ads detract from the otherwise illustrious standard of the student newspaper, but they provide an implication as to the extra-curricular activities of all students. The smacks of campus standards in journalism we would like to forget.

It is conceded that the information provided in these ads is beneficial to some on campus. Too, the newspaper has to maintain the trite addage of "freedom of the press". However, freedom without standards ceases to be liberty. The product promoted in these ads is certainly not very subtle encouragement to adhere to any kind of standards.

If however, some individuals must resort to such devices to avoid taking any responsibilities for their actions, then these same individuals will undoubtedly manage to discover the devices on their own; there is no necessity for degrading the quality of the newspaper - and the reputations of its students - by including such advertisements. - And God forbid if they are published only for the money!

Concerned Students on Campus

Dear Concerned;

Money is a major factor with any advertisement since that is the only reason papers print them. But we do choose who will advertise with us.

You inferred that the ad suggests all students are having sexual relationships. That is not what an advertiser does. He simply writes the ad for the people who would have use for the product; in this case students who are "promiscuous." It is not what is implied but what is inferred that is offensive.

Finally, with the number of un-wed mothers and near-epidemic outbreaks of venereal disease, we believe an ad of this sort could only help the individual rather than offend him. -- Editor
