

Russians Charge
Kurdish Student
In Murder Case

MOSCOW (AP) — Soviet authorities have charged a Kurdish student with murder in the death of an African student in the Caspian oil city of Baku last March, the Iraqi embassy said here.

The death of George Daku of Ghana, who had been studying in Baku for six months, was followed by unrest among African students at the University of Baku. The next month, 29 Kenya students left for home, charging they had been subjected to racial discrimination, Communist indoctrination and improper treatment in Baku.

The background of the suspect in Daku's death added another puzzling element to the case. The Iraqi embassy said he was Han Ahmed, in his late 20s, who came to the Soviet Union from Kirkuk, Iraq, without permission of the Iraqi government.

Iraq has been campaigning to put down a Kurdish secessionist movement, which seeks independence for the Kurdish tribesmen living in the mountainous regions of the country.

The Iraqi consul, Abdul Al'Ahmadi, talked with Ahmed in Baku several days ago. An Iraqi spokesman said the trial probably will take place within a week.

One of the Kenyans who left Baku in April said the racial troubles in the city reached a peak with Daku's death. March 7 "There was no question of anything being a natural death," said Nicholas Nyangira upon his return to Nairobi.

"He had been out with some Russian friends and his body was found in some bushes about four miles from the university. He lived with an Iraqi and a Russian student, but we never saw his roommates again. The Russians tried to keep his death a secret but the news leaked out."

Regulations
On Salvage
Are Reviewed

OTTAWA (CP) — Successful salvage ventures of an increasing number of skidding enthusiasts are forcing the transport department to review regulations governing the recovery of sunken ships and their cargoes.

A department announcement Tuesday said public indignation was aroused last summer by what was alleged to have been removal by divers of objects of historical interest from their underwater resting places.

The announcement pointed out that under the Canada Shipping Act any person who recovers a wreck from Canadian waters is required to deliver it to the department's receiver of wrecks or to a customs collector.

Although the department might dispense with delivery of the wreck, the person who finds it does not acquire legal title to it and is faced with the possibility of a claim by the original owner or present holder of the legal title.

The act also provides for aircraft found derelict at sea outside Canada's territorial limit and brought within the limit.
