WHY YOU SHOULD SEE YOUR DENTIST ONCE OR TWICE A YEAR

Gone are the days when our humorists made fun of physicians by reminding readers that the patient has had all his teeth removed, but still has his rheumatism and arthritis. Infected teeth and tonsils are the greatest single cause of these two diseases although diet, cold and dampness, and injury are frequent causes. Humorists, until recently, made fun of the advice that you should consult your dentist twice a year, as they felt this provided more work for the dentist. It is because people do not see their dentist often enough that so many patients must finally have their teeth removed and have to wear plates or dentures years sooner than they otherwise would.

The truth of this statement can be learned from a recent survey reported in a news release of the American Dental Association's Bureau of Economic Research and Statistics. This survey, of the dental needs of 37,911 patients, revealed that 16.7 per cent of women in all age groups who had not seen a dentist in more than three years needed complete artificial dentures (upper and lower plates) as compared with only 5.3 per cent who had last visited the dentist one and one-half to two years previously, 3.9 per cent who saw the dentist a year earlier, and 1.9 per cent who were under dental care six to eleven months before.

For men, the survey showed that 19.8 per cent who had not received dental treatment in more than three years required complete artificial dentures as compared with 6.5 per cent who had been under dental treatment one and a half to two years earlier, and 5.4 per cent who saw the dentist six to eleven months previously.

The above figures tell the true story of how the natural teeth can be preserved years longer by the more frequent visits to the dentist. "The sharpest rise in loss of natural teeth occurred in the over 50 age group with 38 per cent of the women who had not visited their dentist in more than three years needing complete dentures as contrasted with 5.4 per cent for those visiting their dentist six or seven months earlier. For men the difference was even more marked. The percentage of those over 50 requiring dentures was 44.7 per cent for those who had not seen the dentist in more than three years as compared with 7.9 per cent for those visiting the dentist 6 to 11 months earlier.

The above figures can give no estimate of the pain and ill health caused by infected teeth left in the mouth too long.

ELLEN'S DIARY

By An Island Farmer's Wife

We watched the day die — saw the hours of daylight end, past the glory of an August sunset that was exceedingly beautiful; saw the flame-fires which had burned so vividly above contented farmhouses and land fade to enchanting hues of rose which came down to touch the quiet hills, the tips of the woodland spires — and loved the little fields between. "You should see our western fields, Ellen!" a friend of the old years who has since made her home in the West, said not long ago, when visiting her native land we chatted together... talked of a time of which little remains except the tranquil fields that cradling their brooks and their springs move up gently to meet the woodlands and sky... These we have still — and the tidal rivers, and as well in unalterable bequest, about us the wash of our tireless seas. "You'd like them, Ellen... there's something inspiring in their size, and beautiful in their coloring, for they are never the same, even when they are ready to be harvested, they change at the touch of a wind."

This evening the little Island fields were beautiful — those ripened now to harvest, held tenderly as they were in the gentle arms of the waning day. Between pieces of woodland, pale gold, or glowing bright amid the green of meadows. Still they were, every little zephyr having run home to the west at sunset. Hushed, we fancied in respect to week's end or maybe knowing their course was about run, awaiting quietly the sound of the binder.

What did the Alderlea Family today? James and the younger farmer brought field-stone in the busy little truck to lend substance to the making of concrete floors in replacement of planks and earth in this and that building about; if they took time out to attend a stock sale, we are confident the affairs of the farming suffered little thereby.

Rob was at the shingling — an endeavour which stands to last him and his help for several days to come. The lads held roving commissions — pleasant ones we thought, to give them nice memories of this holiday from classes. We saw them trundle a wheelbarrow along a field leading in the direction of the millstream where repairs were to be made to their rustic bridge.

"And wasn't it a lovely place to be at work!" Gage reported later... "the water singing, squirrels chattering... and the birds! They never stopped their chirping. And the crickets sang, I —" he reached down to explore the depths of a trouser-pocket, "brought you one — they bring good luck, don't they? The same as four-leaf clovers. Now," with a look of surprise, "where is he gone to? I'm sure I put him in here!"

At Alderlea who but the children caught rides in the little truck? And what of the housewives? What do Island ones do but "look well to the ways of their household?" Busy are Island farm-folks, each to his or her own care of the day... but now "The fields stretch up to meet the woods And when the evening star comes out The farmer's eyes are lifted high His day's work holds him to the sod But dusk can draw him up to God."

Until Monday... Diary... Good-night.....

Morrissey-Quilty Wedding

A pretty summer wedding was solemnized on July 27 at the Church of the Most Holy Redeemer, Charlottetown, when Mary Ellen, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Quilty, South Shore, became the bride of Cyril Alexander Morrissey, East Royalty. Rev. Father Murphy, Rector, performed the ceremony and celebrated the Mass. Mr. Alex McLean provided nuptial music at the organ, while Mr. Chester Donovan rendered the solos. The bride, given in marriage by her father, chose a strapless gown of white net over satin and a long sleeved lace jacket and tiny buttons closing to the Peter Pan collar; her three-quarter length veil was caught by a tiara of seed pearls and she carried a bouquet of American beauty roses. She was attended by the groom's sister, Leona, as bridesmaid, wearing a floor-length gown of mauve net and lace over taffeta and a tiara headdress of nylon net, and carried a mixed bouquet of snapdragons and mums. The best man was John Quilty, cousin of the bride. The ushers were the brother of the groom, Orville Morrissey, and Clifford Hogan, a cousin of the bride. Mrs. Quilty chose for her daughter's wedding a dress of dusty rose with matching accessories and a corsage of mums. Mrs. Morrissey, mother of the groom, wore a blue two piece dress suit with matching accessories and a corsage of red roses. A reception was held at the Queen Hotel where the bride's table was centered with a three-tier wedding cake and summer flowers added to the attractive setting. The toast to the bride was proposed by Rev. Father Murphy and responded to by the groom. During the reception piano selections were rendered by Mr. Elmer Power. The bride and groom left on a motor trip to Boston and other American cities. For travelling the bride chose a two-piece white linen suit with matching accessories. Mr. and Mrs. Morrissey will reside in Saint John, N. B.

Modern Etiquette

By Roberta Lee

Q. When a young man, calling on a girl, brings her some candy, what is she supposed to do? A. Thank him graciously, and of course, be sure to open the box immediately, exclaim over its contents, and offer him some.

Q. How does a girl introduce her gentleman friend, Dr. Black, to her parents, as "Dr. Black" or as "Bob"? A. In a case like this, within her own family, it is quite fitting and proper for her to refer to him as "Bob". Q. When a girl is out in public, either alone or not, and a man persists in following her, what does she do about it, especially if it is very distasteful to her? A. If, after she has asked him point-blank to stop following her, then her only and proper recourse is to approach the nearest policeman and have him handle with the ill-bred fellow.

Morning Smile

Mark Twain once visited the artist Whistler in his studio and was looking over his pictures. He started to touch one canvas. "Oh," cried Whistler, "don't touch that! Don't you see, it isn't dry yet?" "I don't mind," said Mark Twain. "I have gloves on."
