

A DEAR EXPERIENCE.

[CONCLUDED.]

On his part, Silas communicated to her the principal points in his history—told her how much money he had with him, where it was, and showed her how cleverly he had got his pocket pinned up to keep out pickpockets. He even mentioned to her that he was going to New York to buy a pair of pantaloons, and intimated that he thought of getting plaid.

'Oh, don't! I bag of you,' cried she, lifting her delicately-gloved hands in horror. 'Plaids are so awfully vulgar. All the newsboys and porters wear them. Get Cinnamon color; it will be so becoming to your complexion!'

And Silas, thought he did not clearly perceive what possible connection there could be between his complexion and his pantaloons, joyfully promised to be guided by her taste. After this, Silas began to grow cold, and he put his arm over the back of the seat, and arranged Juanna's shawl, and he got hold of her hand some way under the shawl, and gave it a little squeeze, and when they came to a tunnel, he went through some performance which damaged her bonnet very much, and made the pink jonquils in the front of it look more like wilted red cabbage plants than anything else.

Before Groseville was reached matters had progressed amazingly. Silas had told her that he was more interested in her than any girl he had ever seen, and she had told him that if all the men in the world were like him life would be worth living, etc.

Then they had arranged a correspondence, and Juanna was to write the first letter and direct it to New York to the care of Silas's cousin, John Jones.

'Groseville!' sang out the conductor at the top of his lungs, and Juanna arose to go out. The infatuated Silas rose, too, and attended her to the platform, and surprised the gaping crowd gathered to greet the train by giving her a resounding kiss when he bade her farewell.

For the next fifteen or twenty miles our infatuated friend was so completely absorbed in his own thoughts that he gave no heed to anything else, but by and by he began to feel somewhat empty in the region of his stomach, and concluded to try a doughnut and a piece of cheese. This feat accomplished, he thought he would look after his pocket-book—not that he deemed that anything had befallen it, but it was a sort of satisfaction to him to feel of it, and remember that it contained fifty dollars.

He put his hand to his pocket, but to his unspeakable horror, he discovered that the pins had been removed, and the pocket-book was gone! With a cry of dismay he sprang to his feet and began to search every inch of space in the car where a pocket-book could possibly be concealed. He screamed to the conductor, who unfeelingly told him, that likely enough the red haired woman who had sat beside him had stolen his money—he had noticed she looked rather 'fast.'

But Silas's grief was fearful. He took everybody into his confidence, and told them about the pantaloons which now could never be his, and bewailed his loss and munched his remaining doughnuts alternately.

When he arrived in New York, his cousin John Jones, was waiting for him, and very kindly took him home with him, and comforted him to the best of his ability.

Two days afterward, when Mr. Jones came home at night, he brought a letter for Silas. Our hero seized it with a cry of joy. It must be from her! She had not forgotten him! Oh, ecstasy! he was to hear from her, and see her writing, and hold to his lips something that had just come from her.

The post mark was illegible, and the envelope was rather a coarse one for the lady to use, and the superscription was decidedly masculine in its general appearance. With eager haste he tore open the envelope and read:

'DEAR OLD COTE.—Much obliged to you for the money which I took the liberty of borrowing from you yesternight. When I get to be a millionaire, I will return it with interest. Hope you're well, and that you will find snuff-colored pantaloons becoming. I believe I promised to marry you, but as my clothes happen to be all that is feminine about me, I don't like to be obliged to keep my promise. A man don't care to marry a man, you know. Wishing you may learn the ways of the world before we meet again, I have the honor to be very truly yours, JUANNA.'

'Dear Lord!' cried Silas, 'who ever heard anything like it? Only to think that that pretty girl was a man! Well, come to think of it, she did smell strong of whiskey.'

Of course, Silas has never recovered his property, and he has been 'dead set' against pretty girls in pink bonnets ever since his visit to New York.

Several Toronto banks announce a decrease of interest on deposits to 4 per cent.

A Good Account.

'To sum it up, six long years of bed-ridden sickness and suffering, costing $200 per year, total $1,200—all which was stopped by three bottles of Hop Bitters taken by my wife, who has done her own housework for a year since, without the loss of a day, and I want everybody to know it for their benefit.'

The American People.

No people in the world suffer so much with Dyspepsia as Americans. Although years of experience in medicine had failed to accomplish a certain and sure remedy for this disease and its effects, such as Sour Stomach, Heart-burn, Water-brash, Sick Headache, Costiveness, palpitation of the Heart, Liver Complaint, coming up of the food, low spirits, general debility, etc., yet since the introduction of Green's August Flower we believe there is no case of Dyspepsia that cannot be immediately relieved. 50,000 dozen sold last year without one case of failure reported. Go to your Druggist and get a sample bottle for 10 cents and try it. Two doses will relieve you. Regular size 75 cents.
