Pro Diver Phillip Nuytten Is A Jack Of All Trades

By DENNIS ORCHARD

VANCOUVER (CP) — A fine line divides safety from danger in competitive and commercial diving, and Phil Nuytten can recall occasions when he slipped over the line and got himself in trouble.

One day in the Columbia River he was sucked into the water — intake chamber of the Celgar pulp mill. He caught his heels on the edge of the chamber, and a partner saved him from being crushed in the pumps.

The next day Nuytten's hand jammed in the screen of the same chamber as he tried to clear obstructions. He had his knife drawn, ready to cut his own arm off, when one last wrench brought it free.

"Ignorance and overconfidence kill more divers than anything else," says Nuytten, 26, a diver for 13 years and a professional since 1957.

The Celgar episodes were founded on ignorance. Seven years ago eliminations for the world spear-fishing championships taught him about overconfidence.

One breath-holding event demanded that entrants dive from 50 feet, swim horizontally 25 feet, and return to the surface.

BLACKED OUT

Nuytten's arch - rival improved on the test by swimming the 25 feet there and 25 feet back before surfacing.

Not to be outdone, Nuytten sought to make the horizontal leg four times, but in the last 25 feet he blacked out, sank like a stone and, in the convulsions of drawing water into his lungs, covered himself almost completely in mud.

Only his white facemask was visible but it was spotted by a rescuer and Nuytten was brought up after 14 minutes in the briny.

While diving admittedly has its hazards, Nuytten is more interested in its profits. He will cut and weld your pilings, coffers and girders; build and repair your foundations; check your wharves, tunnels and pipe; put anything into the water for you or take it out.

He has made himself into an electronics expert by building underwater housings and controls for about $5,000 worth of photography equipment. He believes underwater television is the coming thing for oil exploration and such things as bridge construction.

TEACHES TEACHERS

Nuytten teaches diving instructors for the extension department of the University of British Columbia, and has lectured physicians on advances in underwater technology.

Competitive statistics show him to be Western Canada's top diver for the last five years, and he looks the part. He puts 200 pounds into a five-foot-nine frame, and diving has given him such magnificent leg muscles that he has an awful time finding trouser legs thick enough to fit him.

Nuytten has just completed an underwater film for the National Film Board on hunting wolf-eels.

"This is stuff nobody has ever seen before," he says. "In one scene I grab the eel by the throat and another diver pulls it out of a cave, writhing and snapping.

"Those things come eight — nine feet long out here and they can break a broomstick with their teeth quite easily."

Another immediate project is a film featuring himself and his best friend, good-guy wrestler Don Leo Jonathan.

HUNT OCTOPUSES

"Jonathan's a tremendous diver, really," says Nuytten. "We want to do some stuff on octopus-hunting."

Nuytten could make $100 a day by accepting one of several U.S. offers, but prefers to wait for the break in Canada that he says will make him $50,000 a year. At present, he says, "I might make $5,000 one month and the next month I might not make five cents."

Nuytten and his wife Mary, a bank clerk, have no children.

When Nuytten took up the sport here the West Coast had half-a-dozen divers. Now the Underwater Council he heads represents more than 3,000.

"We're getting a whole new generation of semi-professional divers. They're like the California surfers. They loaf most of the time, and do the odd job."

Nuytten loafs too, but not by choice. Look for him at the grunt - and - groan matches watching Jonathan, or perhaps twisting wrists for free beer at the pub. Twisting calls on an out-of-the-way hinge muscle that comes like steel in a diver's arm.

WATER PRICES SOAR

NEW YORK (CP)—New York swimming pool owners and others affected by strict regulations imposed during the current water shortage are buying water brought in from New Jersey and from private wells in New York. Water has been selling for 1½ cents a gallon. Water Commissioner Armand D'Angelo has forbidden the use of water hoses for everything but fires. The regulations include the filling of private swimming pools.

Opening lead—king of spades.

This hand was played by Sylvester Lowrey, of Philadelphia. He became declarer at five clubs on the bidding shown, and West led the king of spades.

Lowrey had quite a problem to solve. In order to make the contract he had to restrict his losses to a trump trick and a diamond trick. This was quite a task to undertake, since the potential losers consisted of possibly a heart, two diamonds, and one or more trumps.

The problem was further complicated by the shortage of entries to dummy. Lowrey could get to dummy easily enough with the ace of clubs, but how could he then lead a club towards the queen and also attend to his diamond losers at the same time?

Lowrey solved the problem in an unusual fashion. He won the spade lead with the ace and led the queen of diamonds at trick two!

This extraordinary play was very effective and eventually brought home the contract. West took the queen with the king and returned a spade, which was ruffed.

Lowrey now played a club to the ace and led the ten of diamonds, finessing when East followed low. (It would not have done East any good to cover with the jack, since declarer could then return to dummy with the nine.)

Lowrey next led a club from dummy, losing to the king, but then could not be stopped from making the rest of the tricks.

It does seem a little odd that Lowrey was able to lead twice from dummy even though there was only one apparent entry to it, but his unusual play at trick two made this possible.

Entry problems occasionally do arise to plague the declarer and make his task difficult if not impossible, but a little ingenuity at the right time and place can do a world of good.

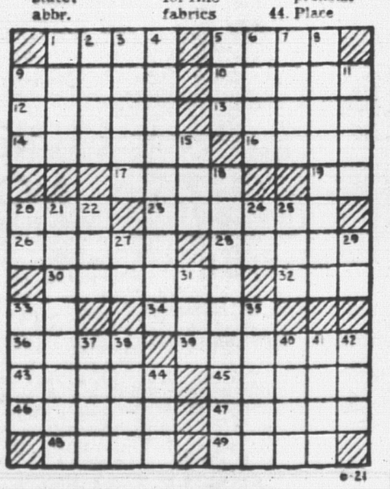
Saturday's Answer



DAILY CRYPTOQUOTE — Here's how to work it:

A X Y D L B A A X E is L O N G F E L L O W

One letter simply stands for another. In this sample A is used for the three L's, X for the two O's, etc. Single letters, apostrophies, the length and formation of the words are all hints. Each day the code letters are different.
