Notes from the Capital.

HOW THE "HAY" WAS SOLD IN THE GLEN—

THE CLEVELAND BOMBHELL—CANADIANS

DON'T SCARE WORTH A CENT.

OTTAWA, Sept. 12.

At this particular season of the year

Exhibitions are held all over Canada, and with them come a general crop or following of shows, circuses, medicine vendors, horse racers, cloth peddlers, Hindoo missionaries, etc., each after the mighty dollar. Whilst

P. E. Island happily escapes the great influx of the many kinds of cheats, yet there are a few who venture there against whom

I desire to record the following new line of game resorted to by two clever cloth vendors a few weeks ago. In the county of Glenfarry, Ontario, in a settlement (a good farming locality) called the "Glen," there lived a wealthy farmer named Mr. Hay, (Squire Sandy), noted for an inordinate love of wealth with which he (Sandy of the "Glen") was fairly well supplied. His charitable traits have been so far clothed with a robe of silence, but weak withal in some points, and, like his great ancestor

Adam, was properly sold by an apparent gentleman of good address and appearance, who drove especially to see Sandy.

The stranger introduced himself as a Mr.

McDonald, from Ottawa, who owned large woolen and other mills, who had made money and wished to retire from city life, buy a good farm and "settle" one of his boys. He claimed that his son was growing rich and would, no doubt, be suddenly reclaimed by a change to the Glen. Mr.

McDonald from Ottawa, alias expert No. 1, soon pumped Sandy, read him through, and finding there was sap in the "Green Hay," pressed him at the proper time.

After this, whilst our courteous hero of the "Glen" and expert No. 1 were walking around talking seriously of the proposed sale of the most suitable lands, a third party. Expert No. 2 happened to collide with them. He proved to be the hero of the try, who assumed the role of a wealthy Southern planter.

After a few preliminaries were gone through, expert No. 2 fully unveiled his enmity towards the Democratic party, and was No. 1 sanguine as to Republican's future victory. He denounced in scathing terms the President's message, and ridiculed the retaliation scheme. In fact he criticised the American constitution and put it down as having outlived its usefulness—affirming that 60,000,000 freemen cannot reasonably be held to acknowledge the binding qualities of an instrument committed to parchment over a century ago.

He, too, wanted to purchase a farm in the Glen, having decided to cross the border and become a true Canadian rather than mingle with the Middle or New England States.

Just now Sandy's thoughts were on the great prospect of making a big sale of a farm or two at fabulous prices. In turn he freely descanted on his own superior knowledge of men and things, and how he became rich. At this stage of affairs a little hand of gambling was proposed and entered into with right good cheer. When Sandy very fortunately gained $300, whilst

No. 1 expert lost $1,000, which was all he had by him; but not to be outdone by the southern planter, No. 1 agreed with Sandy to go to Cornwall and there and then raise $3,000 to come and not only regain the first loss, but to fleece No. 2 and divide the spoil. Sandy did accordingly, having every confidence in his friend No. 1, to whom Sandy, in his own good judgment of men and things, gave half the borrowed sum, and again renewed the work of robbing poor No. 2.

But alas, for poor Sandy's plans. Thus the
