Thoughts For Our Time

By His Eminence Cardinal McGuigan

The good human life on earth requires not only development in the production and distribution of material goods to supply man's material needs; it requires above all the development of man himself by the cultivation of the moral, intellectual and artistic virtues. Progress in all these aspects of the good human life depends on human society. Progress in human society itself depends on progress in all these aspects. Hence the supreme social importance of education Education is the most important task of human society. In education lies the hopes of human society.

Men today are becoming ever more aware of these truths. More and more are men examining our educational systems. All kinds of reforms are being suggested and inaugurated. Education is a topic of general interest.

Since, in the experience of the human race, morals have never been successfully divorced from religion, this column has previously called attention to the truth that any attempt to separate education from religion can never prove satisfactory. Today's article is devoted to another fundamental educational error. For some years now certain leaders in the educational field have been high-lighting this error, but widespread knowledge and understanding of it is still sadly lacking.

The rapid progress of the positive sciences in the modern era, their ever growing importance in the every day life of man, but a tragic misunderstanding, has led to the disintegration of truly human education. The humanizing and liberalizing subjects that dominated past educational systems felt their position threatened by the upstart positive sciences. A tragic and unnecessary conflict of the "Arts" and "Sciences" followed. To defend their own position the "Arts" decided it was necessary to become "scientific". As a result education was reorganized from the ground up into the teaching of highly specialized and "scientific" subjects.

Educators no longer had a common task — the education of a man. Indeed, the well-rounded educated man has become threatened with extinction. Instead, the aim of each department in a highly departmentalized educational system was to turn out experts in their own special field. The education of man disintegrated into the attempted training of experts.

This reorganization of education coincided with the widespread diffusion of education as the only hope for a truly democratic society. The experiment was bound to fail. In spite of fond hopes of loving parents, few, if any of the children of men can hope to become experts in all the fields of adult scientific knowledge.

Such being the case the temptation today is to despair of any education of man as man. The ideal of a truly liberal education for all the sons of men is in danger of being completely abandoned as an unrealizable ideal.

It is essential that men realize that to abandon liberal education is to relegate true democracy to the same scrap-heap of unrealizable idelas. Without generally imparted liberal education democracy becomes impossible. There can be no government of the people, by the people, for the people. Government too becomes the highly specialized field of a few trained experts.

It will be objected, of course, that the attempt to give all men a liberal education has in point of fact failed. To come down to particulars, all Ontario's children are unable to profit by exposure to the liberal arts courses of our matriculation system in preparation for our universities. And the inevitable conclusion seems to be that it is necessary to screen the students according to their "aptitudes".

The only common education from which all can profit is elementary training in reading, writing and arithmetic.

Have we not discovered in practice the impractibility of forcing all children to take the liberal education of our High School Matriculation and Liberal Arts College System?

But this is simply to fail to realize the disintegration of truly liberal and human education that unnecessarily followed the rise to importance of the positive of the sciences. There need have been no conflict between the "Arts" and "Sciences." Science has its proper place among the Liberal Arts. It was not necessary that the "arts" become "scientific." The great mistake was to think that the whole field of education was concerned only with scientific training in specialized fields. Such education belongs only at the adult level of higher education. It is not at all the business of educators at the elementary and secondary levels—precisely the field for true Liberal Education. When education at all levels broke down into unintegrated groups of highly specialized departments liberal education ceased to exist.

Today the very memory of true liberal education is fading from the minds of men. And the confusion becomes ever more confounded. Liberal education does not consist in being exposed to highly specialized and "scientific" treatment even if "liberal" subjects any more than in exposure to similar treatment of sciences or mechanical skills. Nor can you liberalize training in science and mechanical skills by also exposing the subjects to the highly specialized and "scientific" treatment of "liberal" subjects.

Liberal education is the human awakening of a child of man. It is not the training of experts, not even of experts in the Liberal Arts. It is an education to which all the children of men have the right to aspire. It is an education for which, simply as children of men, they have the capacity, and from which, as children of men, they can benefit. It is an education without which democracy can not long endure.

Until men relearn what liberal education is, until the voices of a relatively few educational prophets crying in the wilderness are heard and understood, until then educational reforms are bound to be superficial and destined to give but illusory results.

ELLEN'S DIARY

James adds a faggot to our coals and takes down his pipe for a last draw. A kitten that crept in at our heels, curls up on a cushion on the couch, and there is a balsalmy scent now off the freshly kindled wood. "But, Ellen" James says in surprise, indicating a pan on a cupboard, "what's that? you are not intending to set bread are you? Well, if you are, I'd advise you to get at it woman! Have you no thought at all for the morning?"

NEW, MIRACLE ELECTRONIC EAR HIDES DEAFNESS

CHICAGO, (Special)—An amazing new electronic ear which hides deafness and transmits even whispers with startling clarity, has been revealed by a noted Chicago electronic scientist.

He disclosed that this miraculous new discovery has rendered old-style hearing aids obsolete almost overnight, and brings new hope to the 15 million persons in the United States who are hard of hearing.

He reported that this electronic ear enables the deaf to hear without any button showing in the ear and without dangling battery wires.

To acquaint the hard of hearing readers of this paper with this new miracle electronic ear which hides deafness, full details are described in a fascinating booklet, "New Discoveries to Help the Deaf Hear." It will be sent free in a plain wrapper to anyone who requests it. Address: Electronic Research Director, 1450 West 19th Street, 702K Beltone Building, Chicago 8, Ill. A penny postcard will do.—Adv.

Gallant-Prunty Nuptials

A pretty autumn wedding took place at St. Dunstan's Basilica on Monday morning at 8:15 October 16, 1950, when Helen Harriet, daughter of Mrs. Ernest Prunty and the late Ernest Prunty was united in the holy bonds of matrimony to John Emmett Gallant, son of Mr. and Mrs. Emmett Gallant.

Rev. Patrick MacMahon performed the marriage ceremony and also celebrated the Nuptial Mass.

During the ceremony Mr. Frank MacIntyre rendered appropriate hymns, and during the signing of the register sang "Just For Today."

The bride who was given in marriage by her brother Thomas, looked lovely wearing a burgundy gabardine suit with winter white hat and accessories. She wore a corsage of pink roses and carried a white prayer book.

She was attended by her sister, Mrs. Robert Matheson, who wore a grey gabardine suit with wine velvet hat and wine accessories with a corsage of red roses.

The groomsman was Mr. Frank Gallant, brother of the groom.

After the ceremony, a wedding breakfast was served at the Queen Hotel. The table was artistically decorated with autumn flowers and centered with a three-tier wedding cake, topped by a miniature bride and groom.

The toast to the bride was proposed by the groomsman and fittingly responded to by the groom, after which the happy couple left for points in New Brunswick for their honeymoon.

For travelling the bride wore a grey wool dress, with wine topcoat and accessories to match.

Their many friends wish them much happiness.
