

THE DAILY EXAMINER.

APRIL 25, 1891.

Henry Longworth, Esquire.

We mourn to-day the loss of one of the most highly respected of the residents of Charlottetown. Henry Longworth, Esq., passed away at seven o'clock this morning.

Mr. Longworth was the last of five brothers all of whom were natives of Charlottetown. He was for several years Collector of Customs for the Province, High Sheriff of Queen's County, a trustee of the Provincial Hospital for the Insane, a Commissioner for the Government Stock Farm, and occupied every position with advantage to the country and credit to himself.

Tardy Recognition of Belfast.

FOLLOWING upon the criticism of THE EXAMINER, comes the announcement that Mr. Forbes, of Vernon River Bridge, has been taken in to the Government. We must not be understood as passing a very high compliment upon the Hon. Mr. Forbes when we express the opinion that he is one of the best of those individuals who go to make up the Peters Combination.

Religious Services.

Remember the Railway Gospel Meeting to-morrow afternoon, in McStrangers always welcome. Le. Ser. 14, "Be diligent." Ser. 15, "Zion Church will be conducted by Rev. David Sutherland, in the morning, and in the evening at 7 o'clock. Morning prayer meeting at 10.15, Sabbath School and Bible Classes will meet at 2.30 p.m.

Personal.

Mr. William Wright, the well-known representative of Coristine & Co., Montreal, is on a business trip to the Province. Hon. Senators Montgomery, Prowse and Haythorne, and Messrs. Macdonald, McLean, and Yeo, M. P's., left for Ottawa this morning. It is pleasing to learn that Judge Kelly is recovering from his severe illness. He was able to be out for a short time yesterday afternoon.

CLOSES APRIL 15TH.—THE 1, 2, 3, 4, 5.—The grand prize competition of the Canadian Fireside Weekly, in which 300 valuable prizes are offered, will close on April 15th. In addition, from now until that date a special daily prize will be given for the first correct list received each day.

MURDER MOST FOUL.

An Island Woman the Victim.

Catherine Ring Was Her Maiden Name.

Opium and Liquor Led to the Grave.

LAST night's mail brought the Boston Globe of Tuesday containing full particulars of the latest New Hampshire murder. The victim is a woman who went by the name of Catherine A. Lawrence, but who turns out to be the divorced wife of Dr. George E. Lothrop, of the Boylston Museum, Boston, and a native of Charlottetown. She had been housekeeper for a man named William McDuffee, a farmer living 2 1/2 miles from Rochester, N. H., on the Farmington Road, for the past six years, and it was by the father of her employer, an old man upwards of seventy years of age, that the crime was committed.

It appears that shortly after Catherine entered the McDuffee household she began to drink and dissipate heavily. Old man McDuffee and his aged wife did not like her actions, and urged their son to dismiss her. But she was kind to the children notwithstanding her weaknesses, and young McDuffee was loath to take his parents' advice. In the summer of 1889, however, after paying a visit to Boston, Catherine became even more dissipated than usual, and young McDuffee told her he wanted no more of her—that the sooner she left his roof the better.

On Sunday afternoon last, about 4 o'clock, a young man whose identity has not yet been established, called at McDuffee's house and asked Catherine out for a walk. She went with him. They first called at the house of a neighbor, remaining but a short time, after which they went to a roadside liquor shop where they had several drinks. Next the couple started for the elder McDuffee's house—about a mile nearer Rochester than the son's—where they intended having another drink. On arriving at the house they found the door shut. Catherine knocked at the door, and it was opened by old man McDuffee, who had been in town during the afternoon, and had just enough liquor on board to be in fighting humor. He asked what was wanted, and on being told that they were after liquor, said he had none for the woman and pushed her from the door. Then Catherine said something that angered the old man, and grasping a heavy stick used to bar the door, he sprang towards her and attempted to give her a blow. The woman dodged the blow, and grasping the stick, tried to take it from him. But the old man, despite his years, was strong, and easily threw her from him. Then he followed her inside the door to the kitchen, where his wife was standing, and forcing her into a corner struck her a heavy blow on the head. The woman fell and the blood gushed from her scalp in streams. Her companion, who, during the row had been standing outside avoiding the trouble, now took a hand in the affair only to be clubbed out of the yard in less than a minute.

After running the young man off the premises, old McDuffee returned to the house, and as if not yet satisfied with the brutality of his action, went into a corner, and, just as the unfortunate woman was rising to her feet he picked up a gun and placed the muzzle within two feet of the body, fired. The shot literally mutilated the abdomen. Death was instantaneous. Leaving the dead body upon the floor, the murderer took up another gun and began searching for the woman's companion; but as he did not find him he hid the gun in the woods and proceeded on foot to Rochester. There he was arrested and placed in jail charged with the crime of murder.

Shortly after the old man's arrest the officers proceeded to the scene of the murder. They found the body in the kitchen where it fell, and in the dim lamplight by it sat the wife of the murderer, who did not appear to fully realize what had taken place. A jury was empanelled and an investigation begun. The post mortem showed that death was caused solely by the gunshot wound. A search of the deceased's personal effects resulted in the finding of letters and other articles, which established her identity, although she had carefully refrained from letting any one in the McDuffee house know who she was during all the years that she had been there. A small hand desk and a box of invalid wood contained, among other things, a bundle of letters tied with a string, which when opened, proved to be the correspondence of Dr. George E. Lothrop, who in each letter addressed her as "My dear wife," and frequently signed himself "Your loving husband." These letters, of which there were between twenty and thirty, bore dates of the years 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877 and 1878. The latter ones outlined the troubles that had separated them, and referred to their two children whom it appeared the Dr. wanted to get control of. Another letter was also found to which was signed only "Sister Emily," imploring the one addressed to come home and be forgiven. Among the first things discovered was a photograph of the unfortunate woman on the back of which was inscribed, "Yours truly, Katie Lothrop."

The murder has caused as great a sensation in Rochester as the celebrated Sawtelle affair. Upwards of five hundred persons visited the scene of the tragedy Monday. Old man McDuffee is greatly excited over the affair. It is probable that the defence will be temporary insanity.

moved to Boston late in the sixties. The only one of her family at present in the Province is her brother John, who is well known to most residents of this city. The other members of the family are now in Boston.

Catherine married Dr. Lothrop in Boston about 1871, when she was a young and attractive girl of stylish carriage and pleasing appearance. The marriage was clearly a love match, and persons who claim to know say that the young husband was as devoted as a man could be. The first three or four years of their married life were passed in the West End of Boston, where the doctor was engaged in the practice of his profession, and was rapidly amassing a fortune. In 1872 twins were born to them, and from that time the young wife secretly began to resort to the use of opium and stimulants, for which she developed a strong appetite.

Her downward career dates from that time. As the years rolled on she became more and more under the control of liquor, and from 1875 to 1877-8 she led a life of riotous dissipation. Her husband never suspected her of anything worse, and did everything possible to reform her. But this was apparently impossible. Undoubtedly brain disease was responsible for her dissipation, for when under the influence of opium she was desperately crazy. When these spells were on she would neglect her children, assault her husband, break the windows, and raise a ruction generally; but when the exciting effects were over she would cry bitterly and beg to be forgiven, and then for months at a time would struggle against her accursed appetite, only in the end to fall down into the gutter of misery from which she had tried to lift herself.

She finally left her husband in 1878, and their home was broken up, their two children being sent to board with a relation in Woburn. There both children died of scarlet fever in 1882.

In the meantime Dr. Lothrop had obtained a divorce from his truant wife, and married again. Catherine remained in and about Boston until after the death of her second child, when she disappeared suddenly, and Dr. Lothrop heard nothing further about her until Monday last, when he was informed of her sad ending at Rochester.

Mrs. Lothrop was about forty years of age at the time of her death. People who knew her say that she was addicted to the use of opium more than liquor, and that is probably the reason she was incurable.

Written For The Examiner.

The Immigrant's Appeal.

Oh ye who suffer ills untold Upon the ground you tread! Whose children pine from want and cold, And cry in vain for bread. Fold not your hands o'er cruel fate, Nor weep with blinded eyes, Look onward, peace and plenty wait Anethath our western skies.

I left my home in Erin's Isle By Shannon's glittering wave, I bade farewell a mother's smile, A youthful husband's grave, Together with my orphan band I crossed the raging sea; And sought and found in this bright land, A home for them and me.

Where riches may not rob the feast Won by the hand of toil; Nor oust the man to feed the beast, Upon God's fertile soil. Where industry is blessed;— Yes! though I love my native land, I love this land the best.

Here Scotia finds her sweet blue bell, Here Erin's shamrock blows; Whilst incense floats o'er hill and dell From England's fragrant rose. Each country finds its own again In Fenfold, in this great world, Where Freedom's hand, from mount to main, Her banner hath untarled.

Fair Canada! all lands above In power to conquer wrong; Thou yieldest love in turn for love, Thy strength shall aye be strong. Oh beautiful, peerless, wide domains! Oh ever teeming store! Though eriled myriads seek thy plains, There's room for myriads more.

Now, where the rocky summits rise, At tender eve's decline, I watch the sun of cloudless skies O'er many an acre shine. My heart's best treasures by my side, The years may ebb and flow; Till I shall greet, yon'd storm and tide, The loved of long ago.
