

Restaurant Ass'n President Supports Stricter Licensing

WINNIPEG (CP)—Stricter licensing laws for restaurants and food service establishments are in the interests of the public and the food service industry of Canada, John E. Coles of Toronto, president of the Canadian Restaurant Association, said Wednesday.

He was addressing the mid-winter meeting of the association's executive.

"While my views are my own as a food service operator, I feel strongly that to successfully operate a food service outlet, no matter how large or small, much more than bricks, mortar and capital are required," he said.

"Knowledge and practical training in the food service business in terms of housekeeping, sanitation, awareness of local health regulations, etc., are essential if the industry is to be protected from unqualified food service operators.

CONCERNED ABOUT HEALTH

"Fortunately, today in Canada the majority of food service operators — the successful ones — have the knowledge and realize that they must work always with the health of Canada's expanding population in mind."

Mr. Coles said that the fault must not be laid at the doors of the food service operators, but rather directed towards the authorities who dispense restaurant licences so freely in many parts of Canada.

"We are, as far as I am aware, the only industry in the food field in Canada with no established standards of performance where our operators are concerned."
