"HATEFUL PLEASING RELIEF AFTER MANY DAYS. How a Queens County Man Found Permanent Healing. His Own Experience Tells Fully and Freely some Truths which all Readers of this Paper Should Know.

Here and there, in almost every town of our province, are "chronic" cases over which doctors disagree; cases that become worse year after year. It is to reach such that the gentleman to whom these lines refer, and whose portrait is here given, has written the story of his case.

Mr. Branscomb's home is a Chipman, Queens Co., N. B. It was there that a representative of the Grocer company, called upon him, Sept. 1st of the present year. His greeting was most cordial. He gladly acknowledged his thanks, giving expression to the following statement:

"It is five years since I first became afflicted with a form of indigestion. Last winter it became more severe, developing into chronic diarrhoea. I cannot tell you how much I suffered for SIX LONG WEEKS. It seemed as though relief could not be found. You will remember how I told you of my condition and asked your advice about taking a bottle of GROGER'S SYRUP. You told me that the medicine was a laxative and might not meet my needs. I delayed buying for a few hours until I began to hope that it would help me. Even my clothes seemed a burden because of bloating of stomach. It was with difficulty that I kept about sufficiently to attend to my business.

But I am a well man now from the use of your remedy. In three days after I bought GROGER'S SYRUP the terrible pain and distress across my stomach were removed. My bowels rapidly assumed a natural, healthy condition. Now I eat and drink as well as I ever could. I have gained constantly in flesh since March last. I am perfectly cured.

It seems a duty for me to state my case fully, that others who suffer as I did may know where to find a cure."

Truly yours, E. A. BRANSCOMB.

BEYOND THE SUBURBS

BY A. CONAN DOYLE

CONTINUED.

"It is only too true, Ida. I suspected it before, and he himself showed me as much with his own lips tonight. I don't think that it is a laughing matter."

"But her sister was of a more practical and less sentimental nature. 'I am sure,' said she, 'that dear mother would like papa to do whatever would make him most happy. We shall both be away, and why should papa not please himself?'"

"But think how unhappy he will be. You know how quiet he is in his ways and how even a little thing will upset him. How could he live with a wife who would make his whole life a series of surprises? Fancy what a whirlwind she must be in a house. A man at his age cannot change his ways. I am sure he would be miserable."

"Ida's face grew graver, and she pondered over the matter for a few minutes. 'I really think that you are right, as usual,' said she at last. 'I admire Charles's aunt very much, you know, and I think that she is a very useful and good person, but I don't think she would do as a wife for poor quiet papa.'"

"But he will certainly ask her, and I really think that she intends to accept him. Then it would be too late to interfere. We have only a few days at the most. And what can we do? How can we hope to make him change his mind?"

"Again Ida pondered. 'He has never tried what it is to live with a strong minded woman,' said she. 'If we could only get him to realize it in time! Oh, Clara, I have it, I have it! Such a lovely plan!' She leaned back in her chair and burst into a fit of laughter so natural and so hearty that Clara had to forget her troubles and join in it."

"Oh, it is beautiful! she gasped at last. 'Poor papa! What a time he will have! But it's all for his own good, as he used to say when we had to be punished when we were little. Oh, Clara, I do hope your heart won't fail you.'"

"I would do anything to save him, dear."

"That's it. You must steel yourself by that thought."

"But what is your plan?"

"Oh, I am so proud of it. We will (in my former of the widow and all of our emancipated women. Let me see what Mrs. Westmacott's main idea is. You have listened to her more than I. Women should attend less to household duties. That is one, is it not?"

"Yes, if they feel they have capabilities of a higher order. Then she thinks that every woman who has leisure should take up the study of some branch of science, and that as far as possible every woman should qualify herself for some trade or profession, choosing for preference those which have been hitherto monopolized by men. To enter the others would only be to intensify the present competition."

"Quite so. That is glorious! Her blue eyes were dancing with mischief, and she clasped her hands in her delight. 'What else? She thinks that whatever a man can do a woman should be allowed to do also—does she not?'"

"She says so."

"And about dress? The short skirt and the divided skirt are what she believes in."

"Yes."

"We must get ourselves a dress each. A brand new, unfashioned, emancipated dress, dear. Don't you see my plan? We shall act up to all Mrs. Westmacott's views in every respect and improve them when we can. Then papa will know what it is to live with a woman who claims all her rights. Oh, Clara, it will be splendid!"

"Her milder sister sat speechless before so daring a scheme. 'But it would be wrong, Ida,' she cried at last. 'Not a bit. It is to save him.'"

"I don't know."

"Oh, yes, you would. Harold will help. Besides, what other plan have you?"

"I have none."

"Then you must take mine."

"Yes. Perhaps you are right. Well, we do it for a good motive."

"You will do it?"

"I do not see any other way."

"You dear, good Clara! Now I will show you what you are to do. We must not begin too suddenly. It might excite suspicion."

"What would you do, then?"

"Tomorrow we must go to Mrs. Westmacott and sit at her feet and learn all her views."

"What hypotheses we shall feel?"

"We shall be her newest and most enthusiastic converts. Oh, it will be such fun, Clara. Then we shall make our plans and send for what we want and begin our new lives."

"I do hope that we shall not have to keep it up long. It seems so cruel to dear papa."

"Cruel! To save him!"

"I wish I was sure that we were doing right. And yet what else can we do? Well, then, Ida, this is the end, and we will call Mrs. Westmacott tomorrow."

CHAPTER IX. A FAMILY FLOT.

Little did poor Dr. Walker imagine as he sat at his breakfast table next morning that the two sweet girls who sat on either side of him were deep in a conspiracy, and that he, munching innocently at his muffins, was the victim against whom their wiles were planned. Patiently they waited until at last their opening came.

"It is a beautiful day," he remarked. "It will be just what you need, Mrs. Westmacott. She was thinking of having a spin upon her tricycle."

"Then we must call early. We both intended to see her after breakfast."

"Oh, indeed? The doctor looked pleased."

"You know, pa," said Ida, "it seems to us that we really have a very great advantage in having Mrs. Westmacott living so near."

"Why so, dear?"

"Well, because she is so advanced, you know. If we only study her ways, we may advance ourselves also."

"I think I have heard you say, papa," remarked Clara, "that she is the type of the woman of the future."

"I am very pleased to hear you speak so sensibly, my dears. I certainly think that she is a woman whom you may very well take as your model. The more intimate you are with her the better pleased I shall be."

"That that is settled," said Clara demurely, and the talk drifted to other matters.

All the morning the two girls sat extracting from Mrs. Westmacott her most extreme views as to the duty of the one sex and the tyranny of the other. Absolutely equal, even in details, was her ideal. Enough of the parrot cry of unwomanly and unmanly. It had been invented by man to scare woman away when she poached too nearly upon his precious preserves. Every woman should be independent. Every woman should learn a trade. It was their duty to push in where they were least welcome. Then they were martyrs to the cause and pioneers to their weaker sisters. Why should the weaklings like you and the housekeeper's look be cowardly then? Might they not reach higher—to the consulting room, to the bench and even to the pulpit? (To be Continued.)
