Farm Improvement Raises Implications

By JACK McANDREW

A story out of Ottawa this week which outlines a program of farmland improvement and water conservation for the Island raises some interesting implications for wildlife as well and if the statement is to be taken literally the program will do anything but improve or conserve what wildlife resources we have left.

The statement says that dams are to be constructed on a province wide basis to provide water for stockwatering, irrigation firefighting and rural beautification. Lowland agricultural area in need of drainage is to receive attention, and hedgerows are to be removed to enlarge farm units and to facilitate the use of heavy farm equipment.

The news release also says that the program will be carried out under the direction of the the Provincial department of agriculture.

Carried to its full extent, this kind of philosophy just about writes finish to any program of wildlife conservation unless it is carried on in consultation with the Fish and Wildlife division, and unless some other provision is made for accomadating our wildlife resources within it.

Unless provisions are made, the program could well have the effect of further reducing sources of our own people but the tourist potential of the province as well.

MORE PRODUCTION

It's not that I'm against progress. Anyone with half an ounce of common sense can see that the province has to make its farms more productive to compete in a changing world. There is enormous potential for agriculture according to the experts, and more efficient farm units are a major factor in increasingthe productivity of our Island farms.

But there are dangers in carrying out a program like the one outlined above unless co-operation and consultation is gained ments, and safeguards and compromises are worked out.

Take the matter of dams. You will notice that the statement makes no mention of recreational uses of the ponds to be created by damming.

By recreational uses I mean provision for adequate and efficient fish ladders combined with a regular stocking program so that the ponds can have a greater recreational value than just sitting and looking at them

It's probable that some of the streams to be dammed don't have much of a spawning run, and an expensive fish ladder is not worth the effort. Recognizing this, why not an experimental program fish ladder is not worth the effish than trout in the headwaters. There are many varieties which could exist comfortably in a small shallow pond to provide sport for everyone, Islanders and tourists alike.

SURVEY NEEDED

Draining low lying areas may make more farmland available but it can also have the effect of removing feeding nd nesting grounds for a wide variety of ducks and other marsh birds. It would seem to me logical that before an extensive program in this direction was undertaken, a survey of land use in the province might be done to see if all the suitable land at present is under maximum state of cultivation.

If marshy areas must then be drained it makes a wetland inventory program even more important to preserve nesting habitat. This wetland inventory has been sputtering along for some time now and it should get increased attention. It's purpose is to buy up land unfit for agriculture and preserve it for the use of wildlife.

There isn't any doubt but that hedgerows do make proper use of farm machinery more difficult, and in the trend towards larger and more efficient farm units most probably have to go. When they are removed another big chunk of wildlife habitat disappears as well. Animals and birds need cover for protection, food, and nesting, and some kind of cover is essential if many varities are to exist at all.

There isn't much point in impending progress in this direction except to make a point of saving what cover is possible from the bulldozers. In the short term it's just as easy to remove habitat in wholesale fashion, but it should be realized that this means that more and more of nature's way of regulating insects harmful to agriculture is also being taken away.

In the long run it means a greater use of pesticides to control insects, and insects have an unhappy habit of varieties which in turn call for stronger pesticides. These in turn can be injurious to other forms of wildlife, and pretty soon a very, very vicious circle has been set up.

Attend Turkey Supper At Alpha Y's Men's Club

Members, wives and girlfriends attended the 41st birthday of the Alpha Y's Men's Club of Charlottetown on Tuesday evening with a hot turkey dinner at the Charlottetown YMCA.

Special guests included four young students attending SDU, three from Kong Kong and one from Guiana, South America, members of Y's Men's Clubs in Summerside and Montague and humorous Bob Hogg of Summerside Club acted as Finemaster through the evening.

Two Charter members, Ruel LePage and Reg Taylor were present along with Ern Bell, known affectionately to members as Mr. Y's Man for his devoted and outstanding service to Y'sdom.

After a most enjoyable meal songs were rendered by Dave Hall accompanied by guitarist George Halliwell, and selections from Loran MacLellan.

The meeting then adjourned to the tastefully decorated gymnasium for the continuation of festivities in the form of a floor show. Entertainers included The Southport Trio, a young stepdancing team, the Irish Steppers, a Highland dancing group, the Ross sister and brother dance team and a smart corp of Majorettes. This part of the evening was capably emceed by Y's John MacInnis.

A magnificient birthday cake, the work of Y's Joe Lawrence was wheeled onto the dance floor and was eyed anticipatingly by all present. The cake was a true masterpiece of culinary cunning.

The evening continued with dancing to the music of The Tartans.

The celebration was climaxed by the cutting and distributing of the cake by the two charter members.

Magazine Salesman Has Case Remanded

Richard William James Murray, of Stroud, Ontario, appeared before Magistrate James B. Johnston Q.C. in Queens County Magistrates Court yesterday on the charge of "by false pretention with the intention of fraud, did obtain $92 from Mrs. Sara MacCallum, Brackley, P.E.I."

Mr. Murray is a magazine salesman for Inter Provincial Readers Service, a local sales division selling for the MacLean-Hunter organization. The Inter Provincial Readers Service organization of magazine salesmen and salesladys is managed by Harold Robert Wellwood, Regina, Sask.

When asked by the crown prosecutor, John Nicholson Q.C. if they had a license to sell magazines on P.E.I. at the time of the dealings with Mrs. McCallum, Mr. Wellwood stated that he did not have a license for selling magazines on P.E.I. but had obtained one for Sherwood. He also mentioned that he had been making selling trips to P.E.I. for the past five years or so and had not realized a license was required.

VISITS NEIGHBOR

The accused had visited a neighbor of Mrs. McCallum, and sold her a subscription. He, at that time asked who lived across the field and was told that Mrs. McCallum, an elderly lady, and that he should not try to sell her a subscription because she was 92 years old and her memory was not very good. Mr. Murray stated that he had to see her or his boss would be angry with him.

The accused on November 10th attempted to have a cheque certified on Mrs. McCallum's account at the Bank of Nova Scotia and was told the cheque would not be certified. He then had a fellow salesman attempt to have the cheque certified but he was also refused.

Mr. Murray and his employer Mr. Wellwood made another trip to Brackley and Mr. Murray paid another visit to Mrs. McCallum. Mr. Wellwood stated in court that he did not stay at McCallums, but drove off to the beach where he stayed for about ten minutes and then returned to pick up the accused. Mr. Wellwood also told the court that he did not know the amount on the check Mr. Murray had obtained as he had only glanced at it as he drove away.

The accused was then driven to Charlottetown by Mr. Wellwood where he went to The Canadian Bank of Commerce, cashed the cheque for $92 and opened an account.

An accountant at The Canadian Bank of Commerce had the city police investigate when they received a call from Holman's requesting that a cheque being cashed by the accused be validated. Another cheque on the newly opened account had been cashed shortly before. Police investigation led to Mr. Murray's arrest.

The case has been remanded for further trial on November 30th. Mr. Murray is being represented by Frank Sigsworth, QC.
