

IN MEMORIAM

NEWTON TAYLOR

Former Islander Dies In Iowa

The residents of Rocky Point and surrounding areas in both town and country were shocked and deeply saddened when it was learned that death had touched with tragic suddenness, one of the districts best known and most highly respected citizens in the person of Newton Taylor. The deceased had left his home during the late afternoon of September 16th to carry on a business transaction with a neighbor, and used his farm tractor as a means of conveyance. Having completed his task he turned homeward and on the journey forfeited his life in a fatal accident. In some unaccountable manner, the tractor striking the shoulder of the road and overturning into the drain, pinned Mr. Taylor underneath. Mr. Taylor who was 46 years old was a strong capable active man in the best of health, and his sudden, tragic demise cast a deep cloud of sorrow over a wide area in which he was very popular. His kindly, generous and courteous manner and disposition, his willingness to help all good causes, and his fine neighborly characteristics, endeared him to a large circle of friends young and old.

Mr. Taylor was the son of Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Taylor, Nine Mile Creek was a farmer and lobster fisherman, building for himself and family, by good business practices and honest dealing and hard work a splendid farm home at Rocky Point, where he removed shortly after his marriage, about seventeen years ago.

He is bereaved by his immediate family, composed of his wife the former Thelma Smith of Rocky Point, two boys Sterling and Winston, aged 17 and 14 years respectively, and adopted daughter, Ethel. He is also survived by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. David Taylor and three brothers, Winston and Lee, Nine Mile Creek and Lorimer in the United States.

The funeral held from the home to New Dominion Church was one of the largest ever experienced in this part of the Province, and friends far and wide attended in large numbers to pay their last marks of respect and grief over the deeply mourned and beloved. Masses of flowers, almost 100 pieces, gave evidence of the wide-spread sympathy that went out to the bereaved family. Rev. Dr. A. E. Weir, the pastor of the deceased delivered an impressive and comforting discourse and feelingly referred to the great and tragic loss that had come to the family and the whole community in Mr. Taylor's passing. A special solo, a favorite of the deceased "Beyond The Sunset" was rendered on request by Mr. W. R. Shaw. The pallbearers were Spurgeon Currie, Bruce MacLean, A. MacIsaac, Keith Taylor, Wilbert Currie and Thomas Lowther.

Home and School Ass'n Meeting At Stella Maris

The annual meeting of the Home and School Association was held at Stella Maris, on Monday evening, October 5th, with the Vice-President, Mrs. Reuel Gauthier.

The Treasurer, Mrs. Vincent Blaquiere, gave her monthly report, after which she gave the financial statement of the past year.

The Convener of the Entertainment Committee, Mrs. Lawrence Doucette, reported having started in lottery to help procure equipment for the school.

Mrs. Joseph Gaudin, Convener of the Educational Committee, reported on the regional meeting held at Hunter River last spring, and of the Annual meeting in Charlottetown.

Mrs. Reuel Gauthier gave a report of the Annual Provincial meeting. This meeting decided the membership fees were to remain as before, 20c a year. Each branch was asked to have an account of their monthly meeting published in the press so all might learn about the activities of each branch. The parents were urged to encourage their boys and girls to enter the teaching profession, for the number taking the Teacher Training Course at P. W. C. was decreasing noticeably every year.

Sister St. Mary Eugenia in her remarks said that both the teachers and the pupils are making the best of the situation in which they find themselves, but it is most encouraging to know that the many present inconveniences will soon be replaced by the lovely school that is being built for them.

Sister expressed her appreciation to the members of the Home and School for their effort in trying to raise funds to help procure equipment for the new school, and stressed the point mentioned by the President "that parents should encourage their boys and girls to become teachers. This is a wonderful profession, not so much from the financial viewpoint but especially for the priceless educational treasures it holds. What greater work is there than training the mind and forming the habits of the young?" Moreover, no profession holds greater stimulus for self-improvement.

Mrs. Joseph Gaudin, a former teacher, also expressed her views on this subject. She said that now the salaries are so much better than formerly, and the text books are all so much more interesting that boys and girls have in this an additional attraction, and she, herself, would do her best to encourage her children toward that goal. It was moved by Mrs. George

Lesson 1

It was Jerry's idea entirely. Joyce, when she was told about it, wasn't so sure that she wanted to creep downstairs when everyone was in bed, to watch for the new car. Daddy had told them at supper-time that it was to be delivered that night, and Jerry decided that he just couldn't wait until morning to see it.

Joyce protested, "It wouldn't be right when Mother thinks we are asleep."

"Who could sleep when a new car is being driven in right under his window? I couldn't. Neither could you. And Mother has to stay with Granny tonight, so we couldn't ask her anyway."

So holding tight to her twin brother's hand, Joyce crept down the stairs to the dining-room, wondering why things looked so strange by moonlight that were so familiar and friendly by daylight. "I hope the man who drives it here won't run into anything and scratch it," said Jerry as they entered the dining-room.

"Or be run into by a drinking driver who might upset and smash it altogether. That's what happened to the Jones' car last week. Billy Jones was in the hospital for weeks with both legs broken," added Joyce with a little shiver, as together they made their way to the window-seat and stared out into the moonlit yard. Things looked so different outside too. When Joyce looked back into the room again she rubbed her eyes in surprise. She knew perfectly well that there were seven chairs in the room, and now there wasn't even one! Nothing but the well-polished table was left in the familiar room, nothing but the table and Jerry—and herself.

Turning to ask Jerry if he, too, noticed the change, her first sentence stopped even before it began. There right over Jerry's head—and over her head as well, for that matter—floating down on a moonbeam, was the new car. Joyce tried to scream, but couldn't. She watched fascinated, while the shiny, big car had settled itself comfortably on the dining-room table.

Scarcely had the car come to rest when the door opened, and out on to the small space left on the table stepped the queerest little man that she or Jerry had ever seen. A dark cape was carefully wrapped about him, and on his head was the strangest little high hat.

"My! If his cape were pulled tighter about him and his hat on straight he would look just like a bottle," giggled Joyce, then stopped short, for the strange little man, with a flourish, was removing his hat and introducing himself.

"Sir Alcohol, at your service," he began, then, with a knowing smile at Jerry, he explained that since so much that had to do with the manufacture and the care of the car depended on him he felt he had a right to make the first trip in it. "In fact," he added, "as I rode along, I felt that it was really my car as much as yours."

"But Daddy bought it," protested Joyce.

"Quite so, quite so," was the smiling answer. "But there is a great deal to be done to a car before it can be sold, and I'm the good friend who had a hand in it all along the way."

"Why you—you're not so good at all," Joyce's blue eyes were not very friendly for the moment. "Alcohol isn't a friend to anyone. It makes people who drink it stumble when they and say things they would never say if they didn't drink. Alcohol isn't a friend to anyone. I heard Daddy say that Mr. Ker, who is so kind when sober, is quite a different person after an evening at the Beverage Room with his friends. One morning last winter we wakened up, you remember, to find Mrs. Ker and Danny asleep in our guest room. Mother never told us how it happened, but at school I was told that Mr. Ker drove them out of the house in the middle of the night. He had come home crazy with drink. Alcohol isn't a friend to anyone. You do look like a bottle, exactly like one, even when your hat isn't straight."

It wasn't often that Jerry corrected his sister, but this time he felt he must. Sir Alcohol—such a queer name even for a queer little man—was their guest, and one didn't make unfriendly personal remarks to a guest.

"Oh, I remember," he remarked quickly, giving Joyce a nudge to be still. "Uncle Phil told me that Alcohol had its good uses in making some things. Perhaps an automobile is one of them. Do you really do anything useful, Mr.-Sir-Alcohol?"

"Call me Al if you care to," laughed the little man, "but don't don't ever belittle my uses either good or bad," and he glanced slyly at Joyce.

"When you admit you do have bad uses too," said Joyce.

"Um—well—it's not really my fault. But I'd much rather be used for good things, I mean, about a car? I can't think of anything. Can you, Jerry?"

"Sir Alcohol rubbed a tiny hand over the smooth painted side. "What do you think of this?"

"Of what?" asked Jerry.

"The paint job. I had a double hand—two hands, one might say"—and he held out both small hands, "in this. Because I dissolve—that means melt—certain gummy substances so that they will mix more readily with water—and both the gum and water are needed—I help make all the best paints and varnishes and enamel finishes used today. I'm rather proud of this job." Again he stroked the glossy blue side of the car.

Both children watched him with interest, but neither spoke.

"You don't believe me little lady? Well, I don't wonder. I scarcely believe it myself when I see the results of some of the wrong uses to which I am put. I have my proud moments, like any other good workman, and this is one of them." And he drew himself so stiffly that Joyce had difficulty in keeping back the laugh that would come as she watched him.

"But Jerry wasn't laughing. "I didn't know that you really had good uses like that. Mr.-Sir-Al. Have you any others besides helping gummy stuff mix with water?"

"To be sure. Climb into the car beside me and we'll look them—and the car—over at our leisure. Ladies first," and he raised his hat with such a flourish this time that Joyce felt just like Cinderella stepping out for her famous ball as she stepped into the shiny new car and carefully sat down.
