OUR LONDON LETTER.

The House of Commons—London's Fog—Oxford-Cambridge Race

We have been having delightful weather for some time past. Lately, however, the fog which is somewhat out of season, has made its appearance. It was so thick one day last week that it very much interfered with business. It lasted from early morning till about 4 o'clock p. m. The gas and electric lights remained lighted all day long. London fogs are quite different from the Bay of Fundy ones. They are more like smoke, contain little or no moisture, and are very hard on one's eyes and throat. Very seldom however do they last longer than one or two hours, and a whole day's heavy fog only happens once in a very long time.

Parliament has been sitting for almost three months, but the end of the session is yet far off. Before visiting the House of Commons here I expected to see an immense room where six or seven hundred members could sit comfortably and a thousand visitors listen to the debates. My surprise was great when I found a room smaller than our House of Commons at Ottawa and in which only two thirds of its six hundred and seventy members can sit, with accommodation for not more than two or three hundred visitors. As you are probably aware no desks or furniture are used, only benches upholstered in dark leather and arranged in rows to the right and left of the Speaker. The Government sit to the Speaker's right, the Opposition to his left, so that they face each other. Immediately in front of the Speaker sit the clerks of the House. The Ministerial benches are the first front ones to the Speaker's right. The Liberal Unionists, though they often speak against Conservative government measures yet vote with them and sit on the same side of the House, though apart. The Irish Nationalists always sit in opposition, regardless of what party is in power. It is not to be wondered at that they never get any "pickings." The rules of the house are very strict. The rustle of a newspaper or the scratching of a pen is never heard, for not even the members are allowed to either read or write whilst in their seats. With nothing else to take up their time or attention the members have either to sit in their seats and listen to the person addressing the House or retire to the lobby, smoking rooms or library. You can always tell of what the calibre of the member occupying the floor during a debate is according as the benches are well filled or comparatively empty.

I had the pleasure of being present some days ago when the government criticism in the Sudan was undergoing some criticism. Mr. Morley, in committee, set the ball a-rolling by moving to reduce the amount asked for the war in Egypt. He took occasion of this to condemn the Government's policy in the Sudan. Though not perhaps an orator he has a facile and pleasing delivery, and marshals his facts to the best advantage. His speeches command full benches and are listened to with marked attention. In the absence of the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, Lord Salisbury, who sits with the Peers, Sir John Broderick answered. Although quite a young man as yet, he has already made his mark. He has a good grasp of the subject matter, and his justification of the government's position elicited a frequent "hear, hear," from the Conservative benches and a round of applause on conclusion. Sir Edward Gray was Under Secretary under the late administration. It will be remembered also that he was one of the most likely men for Liberal leadership when Mr. Harcourt resigned. In a concise speech, bristling with facts and good sense, he endorsed the government's action and showed how impossible it would have been to act otherwise than was done under the circumstances. Sir Henry Campbell Bannerman damned the Government with faint praise, but in order to annihilate Mr. Morley, voted against them on the division. Other speakers were Mr. Carleton, Mr. Labouchere and Sir Charles Dilke. Amongst the many faces in the House I recognized the following from caricatures and photographs: Mr. Balfour, Mr. Goschen, Mr. John Redmond, Mr. Dillon and Mr. Edward Blake. Mr. Chamberlain was ill at the time.

Last Saturday the annual Oxford-Cambridge boat race took place on the Thames. It evoked more interest than usual as Cambridge who had lost to Oxford for the last nine years were expected this year to redeem their honor. The course was from Putney Bridge to Mortlake, a distance of four and one quarter miles, and shortly before the race began both sides of the river between these two points were crowded with thousands of persons. The sight was certainly an interesting one. Grandpa, grandma, father, mother, son and daughter, all were there, and as the hour for the start drew near the air literally vibrated with suppressed excitement. On the river the scene was most animated. Row boats, steam launches and tugs, gaily decorated with the colors of their favorite club hither and thither, each carrying a merry party. The larger boats and barges early took a position by the river bank and moored there. "The police boat to clear the river," says a neighbour, "They will be along," now replies another, and in five minutes more the hum and excitement up the river tells you they are in sight. Now they come in the distance. "Oxford ahead!" excitedly exclaims a man with a pair of field glasses, "No, its Cambridge," says another; and they have a good light too." And he is right for now the light-blue on their caps and the blades of their oars can be distinctly seen. Both crews were pulling hard. But it is quite evident that the day is lost for Oxford, for besides being fully five lengths behind as they pass the bridge on which we are, we can see that they are laboring hard and throwing much water about while Cambridge is rowing a comparatively clean stroke. Now they have only half a mile to go, and though in smoother water it is too late for Cambridge finishes three and a half lengths ahead, a popular and deserving winner. Cheer upon cheer, whistle upon whistle from the river boats greet the champions, and one of the first events of the year is over, and we take our train back to the city.

A. E. A. London, April 3, 1899.

The old man who looks out at the world with clear and healthy eyes cannot help feeling great gratification at the thought that his children have inherited from him no weakness nor tendency to disease. The healthy old man is the man who has throughout his life kept his digestion good and his blood pure. Not one in a thousand does it. Germs go through the healthy body without effect. Let them once find lodgement or let them find a weak spot, they will develop by the million and the blood will be full of them. Instead of giving strength to the tissues, it will force upon them innutritious matter, and the man will lose flesh and the more susceptible he is to disease. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is the only medicine that absolutely and infallibly cures all blood diseases, and almost all diseases are blood diseases. It isn't medicine for some one particular so-called disease. It is a medicine for the whole body. It forces out all the germs of disease, and replaces impurities with rich, red blood.

MILLIONAIRE TO BURGLAR.

How Unlucky Speculation Ruined a Hungarian Financier.

VIENNA, April 12.—Michael Szozery, once a millionaire and leading financier in Budapest, who played a prominent part in both the commercial, and social life of the Hungarian capital, has just been committed for trial at Budapest for burglary. His wife in the old days was a society belle, and her salon was the rendezvous of some of the most exclusive set. Unlucky speculations, however, ruined Szozery, and, deserted by his old friends, he became utterly destitute. The ex-millionaire became a cabman, while his wife, the ex-society belle, took in needlework to augment their income. Things went on thus until his wife died, when Szozery became desperate and went to the bad. He became porter in a warehouse, then a barrel-organ grinder, next a crossing sweeper, and finally a burglar. He may shortly be a convict.

GIRDLES THE EARTH.

Cures by Dodd's Kidney Pills all Over the Globe.

Mr. John S. Morgan of Bridgewater, N. S., Saved by Dodd's Kidney Pills After all Other Means had Failed to Help Him

Bridgewater, N. S., April 14.—That "Endless Chain" of proof that Dodd's Kidney Pills are the only Kidney Cure known to be infallible, pass through Bridgewater.

Mr John S Morgan, a prominent local business man, speaking of the matter recently, said: "There is an endless chain of cures made by Dodd's Kidney Pills, and it encircles the entire globe. Every cure is a link, and there are hundreds of thousands of them."

"I am a link myself. And I can assure you that if you are afflicted with any kind of Kidney Complaint, as mine of every ten persons are, your only hope lies in Dodd's Kidney Pills; I should know, for I have been through the mill, and my experience furnishes indisputable proof."

"I had Kidney Disease for eight years. I couldn't begin to give you an idea of the agony I endured. It passes all description."

"I tried all the remedies advertised to cure Kidney Disease. My money was only wasted. I was treated by different physicians. They couldn't even relieve me, much less cure me. I had lost forty pounds in weight. My urine was almost black, and scalded horribly in passing. Rheumatism pains racked every joint. I don't believe any man could suffer more than I did and live."

"As a last resort I tried Dodd's Kidney Pills. One day my cure began. I felt better each succeeding day. I used twenty boxes of Dodd's Kidney Pills and was given back my health, strength and vigor. Nothing on earth but Dodd's Kidney Pills could have saved me. They'll save every other victim of Kidney Disease."

The Logic of It

The Gaelph Herald hits off the attitude of the Liberal press on the Yukon scandals rather neatly, as follows:

"Sir Hibbert Tupper—I make these charges believing them to be true, and with them I submit evidence of their truth, and shall be prepared to submit further evidence before a commission."

"Hon. Mr. Sifton—The charges are absolutely and entirely false. The people against whom the charges are made say they are false."

"The Liberal Press—Hon. Mr. Sifton completely swept away the Tupper charges. There is no need for an investigation."

Athletes would do well to subscribe for Land and Water. It contains articles and illustrations on running, jumping and everything that is done with the spiked shoe, bicycle, fishing, running, hunting—more so of athletic sport, and articles written on training, etc., by champions of different events. It gives full particulars and illustrates the recognized champions of both Canada and the United States, also English champions and sporting affairs. All persons interested in outings, sporting and athletics should subscribe early and secure the interesting editions of the Land and Water for the coming season. It is said that the soldiers who had taken Hood's Sarsaparilla stood the long marches in Cuba much better than the others.

Statistics of Marriage. The chances at birth that baby will eventually marry are 9 in 20, or rather less than one-half. This result may seem surprising, but it is largely accounted for by the great mortality of persons under marriageable age, especially of infants up to the age of 5. No fewer than 38 per cent of babies die before they are 5 years old, and 44 per cent of the whole population before the age of 18. In England, as in this country, according to belief, the females outnumber the males.

Out of every 100 persons now living, 60 are single, 35 are married and 5 are widowed. So that on the average 1 person in every 20 you meet in the streets, in the train, or wherever it may be, will be either a widow or a widower, and 3 out of 5 will be unmarried. In England an average husband and wife on their wedding day may expect to live together for 27 years, in France only 26, in Holland and Belgium 23, but in Russia 30.

DEAR SIRS,—I have been a great sufferer from rheumatism, and lately have been confined to my bed. Seeing your MINARD'S LINIMENT advertisement, I tried it and got immediate relief. I ascribe my restoration to health to the wonderful power of your medicine.
