Partridge Hit New High In Number This Past Season

Our ruffed grouse... Native partridge to most of us... hit a new high in numbers this past season of 1964. Improved habitat could be the reason and this has been the outcome from the heavy pulp wood cutting that has been going on for many years. Thousands of acres have been cut for pulp and what was once heavy stands of black spruce have been turned into heavy 'slashings' where raspberries, mint, box berries and other forms of wild fruit and herbs, dear to the heart of ruffed grouse, grow in profusion.

Grouse hunting is an art in itself. Just tramping miles of swampland and wood roads is not good enough Grouse are 'home bodies" and have their own special "hangouts". As one seasoned grouse hunter remarked: "This spot is like Mrs. Murphy's pool room.... only you find grouse here instead of men." That hunter knew his grouse. Like humans they hang around places where there are some attractions. With grouse its food, natural food, in abundance and cover to suit. With men its pool, a pint of beer, and congenial company.

In the days when brother Earl and I hunted we knew where to go to find grouse... a swale where wild mint grew amid the alders....a cluster of wild apple trees grew in a field that had been reclaimed by nature or some woodland corner we knew we'd find grouse even if we did not pin-point the attraction. We still talk about one such spot where a cluster of wild apple trees grew at the edge of a beaver dam. Thorns and alders grew around those apple trees in profusion. Every Saturday afternoon we were free to sally forth on a grouse hunt we'd visit this spot

Old Jack, our Springer spaniel, would be told to "heel" and we would stand motionless for as long as 10 minutes and stare at the ground under the trees and into the tree branches for a sign of movement or the motionless head and neck of a grouse. As a last resort we'd give Jack the "go ahead signal" and— it never failed— from eight to a dozen grouse would boil out of these like buzz bombs. The hand loaded black powder shells would emit their smoke screen and the echoes of the cannonade would fade in the distance.

TOP SHOOTING

For about five years we had sport there but a severe winter (it was hard on apple trees in any event) killed out this small grove of apple trees. Every fall we had several engagements with those apple-tree grouse but never bagged one. It was tough shooting as we would have just a split second glimpse of a vague shadow through a maze of leaves and shrubbery. This was in the late 20's and early 30's. We talked about this "grouse haven" a few months ago and neither of us could remember bagging a grouse at this spot although we shot our share in other places. There was a time when a ruffed grouse had about a one in 10 chance in ordinary cover.

The hunting we enjoyed in those days was something out of this world. We would start off the hunting season in mid-August on Black-bellied plover that flocked to the pasture fields in their hundreds. In September it was ducks and yellow legs with the odd wildgoose October was the goose month for us along with ducks, woodcock, snipe and ruffed grouse. We always referred to them as "native partridge". In the late 30's Hungarian partridge shooting was something out of this world. the daily bag limit on Hungs was eight per day. A lot of my friends wanted me to shoot a few Huns for them and I obliged them. I shot my limit of eight per day for 12 days in a row 96 Huns and then I left Huns alone for weeks. There was nothing to it if one could shoot straight. Incidentally all of the 96 Huns were shot on the wing... on the "sit" was considered a crime.

In the 40's and early 50's pheasants were so plentiful they practically added colour to our swamps and swales. I sent Sambo and Timmie, our two German Shorthaired pointers, into a swamp at Fort Augustus near the mouth of Chapel Creek. The cackle of cock pheasants taking off sounded like a couple of Model T Fords warming up and the same thing occurred above the late Fred Leard's Mill at Pisquid. Incidentally all I brought home with me was the memory of their sound- off. When pheasants wised up they ducked and rain like rabbits.

ALWAYS REMEMBER

One pheasant hunt will always remain in my memory. One morning at Lake Verde Timmie routed out a pair of big cocks from an alder swamp. Both were singles that broke out within 35 yards of me. I was on the beak that morning and made two clean kills. A half hour later at Hermitage Timmy pinned down a covey in the middle of a field covered with matted wild hay and short, stubby spruce trees It was every cock pheasant for himself. Timmy would rout them out one at a time. I filled out my limit of five per day in less than five minutes. When a cock pheasant gets caught with his landing gear down he panics. They'd freeze deep in the matted flyway until Timmy was almost on top of them. I can see them yet erupting from the tangle like buzz bombs carrying a couple of fist fulls of matted hay across their backs. I nalled the three needed for my limit in two minutes.. all big, multi-coloured cocks. I can still vision the reproachful looks Timmy gave me when I stood and watched two others make their get-a-way without putting the Winchester to my shoulder. Those were the days boys and they are gone forever so far as our present day hunters are concerned A miracle might happen in 15 or 20 years if hunters stop standing in their own light.
