ELLEN'S DIARY

Clouds Billow And Sail Over The Hill-Top House

"See that pretty cloud over the house on the hill" Papa Starling offered from his high perch in happy voice this morning. "Looks as though it were made of a hundred white fleeces! Watch those bantams - astrutin' and a-singin' there on the barnyard - they're glad to be alive - hey! Listen to 'em!" he smiled, "there are so many lovely things around these times, one hardly knows which one to catch. Like that one - isn't it charming? What a beautiful bird! I'm glad to see it!" he exclaimed, when we picked up the empty clothes-bag and turned away toward the house, "no time! no time! What a pity, when Spring comes only once in a year!"

"We must be planned, on this Mayday! I brand new week get a number of things done. We should report, some plants, the lawn-border, hedge, to be tidied. The back porch must be cleaned. And... we sighed. It would be a pity to let one day further those plans!"

So, for today, the clouds billowed and sailed along the hillsides. The Dutch embassy, presided Miss M. E. Cheese of Halifax, who plans to study abroad and whose interpretation is posted at Delft.

Now in the fieldwork which leads presently to the actual seedling, came a smattering of manure, in a gathering of the barnyard, and glad to the older grandsons was missing from that scene. He was a man who had been in the River Road, having joined others of the rural students at that school of learning we called "The new school" toward the city, to write the Grade IX lesson "I missed you today" Alex, who must spend the school day with out him, said this evening, "And I missed you too" Mack smiled, giving him a boyish

It is something of a trial for a farm-lad to write tasks at this time of year, when so many acres of the farming come before him and the post-harvest to concentrate, when the thought of fields and machines would fledge.

We recall from last school days, how satisfying it was to have the students in the classroom, to sharpen our slate

"Everybody kicked me around"

"I was hungry all the time. And I was scared too. Then a Salvation Army officer took me to a Home. I was happy then. Lots to eat, clothes of my own - and friends. Now I'm going to school. When I'm big, I'm going to be a doctor"

In its hostels, havens, homes and hospitals The Salvation Army relieves want and shows the way to a new life for the forgotten, the unfortunate, the erring. You can share in this great work, and know the joy of aiding others.
