BURGESS BEDTIME STORIES

AN OLD FRIEND ARRIVES

Those friends by Time put to the test. You almost always find are best. —Old Mother Nature.

Grandpa Pelican sat on his favorite rock looking out over the blue, blue sea to where it seemed to meet the blue, blue sky on the edge of the Great World. He had had a good breakfast of fish which he had caught with no trouble at all. Now he had nothing at all to do but sit on his big rock and be lazy, than which there is nothing he likes better. Jolly round, bright Mr. Sun was almost overhead. He was shining his brightest, but he couldn't make Grandpa Pelican too warm because the Merry Little Breezes of lively Sister Trade Wind were constantly dancing around him and keeping him in perfect comfort.

From the sandy beach not far away Teeter the Spotted Sandpiper flew over to a rock next to the one on which Grandpa Pelican sat dozing and dreaming. Grandpa Pelican blinked a sleepy eye at him. "Are you glad you are here?" he asked.

"Are you glad you are here?" he asked.

"Of course I'm glad I'm here. What any one wants to stay up north in winter for I don't understand. It is lovely up there in summer, but it makes me shiver to think what it must be like up there now," declared Teeter.

"What any one wants to go up there at all for puzzles me. You say just thinking of what it must be like up there now makes you shiver. I never have shivered in my whole life. No, sir, I never have shivered and I don't want to. Some folks don't know when they are well off. If they did they would stay where it is always summer just as I do. Always warm, plenty to eat and nothing to do; what more can you ask for?" replied Grandpa Pelican.

Just then some one came up on the beach from under the palm trees that lined the edge of it. For an instant Teeter stopped bowing and bobbing and stared. Yes, sir, he stared. Could he have rubbed his eyes I am sure he would have, just to make sure that they were not fooling him; that he saw what he wanted to see. Could it be? It

Contract Bridge.

WEAK TWO-BIDS

Some of the country's best players employ what is known as the "weak two-bid." Under this system, only the initial call of two clubs shows a tremendous hand and demands a game contract; other two-bids (in spades, hearts or diamonds) are under the honor requirements for one-bids, and are therefore essentially shutout bids—or at any rate, that is their purpose. The theory is (and that it has some merit is undeniable) that the opponents have more trouble and are forced to take greater risks in showing their own values to each other, when they must do so at the two-level or higher. To repeat, there are advantages in this system, but there are also pitfalls! For example, two experts "fixed themselves" with their own system in the following deal.

South dealer. Both sides vulnerable.

♠ Q J 10 3
♥ 5 2
♦ 3
♣ K Q J 8 5 4

♠ 8 7 5 4
♥ 9
♦ K J 8 2
♣ A 7 6 3

♠ A K
♥ K Q 8 6
♦ A 10 9 5
♣ 10 9 2

The bidding:

South West North East
2♥ Pass Pass 2NT
Pass 3NT 4♣ Dble.
4♦ Dble. 4♥ Dble.
Pass Pass Pass

It seems clear that South went a little too far, even under his partnership understanding, when he opened his particular holding, vulnerable, with two hearts! It was this call which started the trouble for North-South. North kept quiet on the first round, but as the bidding progressed he formed the blind conviction that East was counting on a very long diamond suit, and to prevent what appeared to be an easy victory for the enemy at three notrump, North "saved" at four clubs. Actually, East-West could not have made three notrump against the best defense, and North, with excellent clubs and spades, should not have been so pessimistic; but, by the same token, South might well have passed to four clubs doubled; his "rescue" in diamonds was a wild gamble.

The East-West defense against the final contract was perfect, and the penalty was 1400 points!
