Rural High School Project Arousing Island Interest

The Central Queens Rural High School project is now in full swing and has aroused a great deal of interest, not only in the area under consideration, but in other parts of the Island where present rural facilities are under criticism, committee chairman Rev. Foster Hall of Hunter River said yesterday.

Mr. Hall has received requests for information about the project from three other centres who see in the provision of a high school of this type some solutions to the problems of the rural areas in respect of high school education, he said.

Such interest, Mr. Hall said "is an indication of the awakened interest in he province in the field of education, although it must be stated that public opinion is yet badly informed of the possibilities that exist in the light government provision and the often expressed desires of the education authorities.

The meetings being held in the Central Queens are directed to the purpose of making known, just what facilities are available, and how country school districts can take full advantage of them. Much has been said about public apathy in the matter of education, but the promoters of the Central Queens project are finding that this is really due to lack of information, and the response to the statements made at the meetings held in New Glasgow and Hunter River is evidence of this.

INDIRECT SUPPORT

Indirect support for the principle of the rural high school was given by the minister of education in his remarks at the semi-annual meeting of the Islands Home and School Federation at Kensington on Monday night. Dr. Dewar stressed the importance of a full education, not only for those who wished to take up a scholastic career, or enter one of the professions, but for all children who wished to grow up, and make a full contribution to the well being of the Island and its economic prosperity.

This emphasis on the necessity of higher standards was echoed by the members of the panel in the discussion which followed, and the Central Queens project committee, instead of feeling that they are voices crying in the wilderness, now realise that they are spearheading a general movement towards a betterment of rural conditions which is commanding an increasing volume of popular support." Mr. Hall said.

PUBLIC MEETING

"The problem of making known the facts will not be an easy one to overcome "he said", and the public should avail themselves of every opportunity to hear and discuss them. Thursday evening will give another section of the project area a chance to do this, when a public meeting will be held in Wheatley River, to which taxpayers of the school districts of Wheatley, Oyster Bed Bridge and Wheatley River have been invited.

Interested people from any other area will be able to join in, and it is hoped that the interest aroused in this limited scheme, which has been devised to meet the need of one particular area will encourage other rural districts to make similar attempts to solve their own problems in the field of rural education." Mr. Hall stated.

Hydrant System Asked For Town

MONTAGUE BUREAU OF THE GUARDIAN

The Montague fire department appointed a committee to wait on the town council at their next meeting with a written recommendation that the council give serious consideration to the installation of a fire hydrant system in the town. It will also be recommended that the town hire a competent engineer to make an immediate survey.

The commitee was appointed following a lengthly discussion at the regular fire department held last night in the council chambers.

A number of firemen expressed their appreciation of the assistance of the town policeman who kept traffic moving and held onlookers back during last week's disastrous fire. They also expressed appreciation of the public in general for their co-operation.

The fire completely destroyed the Reid Farm Equipment building and gutted the home of Mrs. George Thompson.

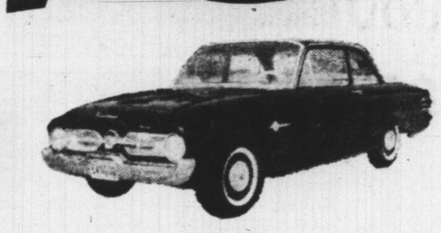
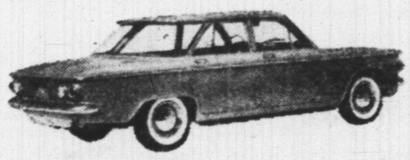
COMPACT CARS





Economical, good-looking, easy to park, powerful, smooth-riding — automobile manufacturers make great claims for their 1960 "compact" cars. But what's the real story? Staff Writer Roy Shields test-drove several of the new cars, and a few old ones, and reports on the situation in a Weekend feature article this week.

hanged by the neck until dead

This man deliberately murdered a young girl. Now he too must die, by hanging. If you were present at his execution—what would you see — how would you feel? Remembering what happened to the girl, would you be glad to see this man die? Or would you feel that no matter what he had done, he should not die? Newspaperman Don Stainsby gives a graphic account of a prison execution in this issue of our Weekend Magazine.

Sparetime Miners

Harry Ryan dreamed of gold for years, and finally leased a tract of land in Nova Scotia that contained an abandoned mine, which he and his wife began to develop. Though the diggings haven't yet paid off in gold, the Ryans have enjoyed every moment.
