U.S. Air Force Testing New Jet Fighter; May Fly At 1,500 MPH

(By Vern Haugland) WASHINGTON, (AP)—The U. S. air force announced Tuesday its new daylight jet fighter, the Lockheed XF-104, is flying successfully.

The brief announcement did not comment on unofficial but reliable reports that the stripped-down "air superiority" fighter is a truly sensational one—that it weighs half as much but is twice as fast as today's swiftest operational jets.

One source has indicated that the sleek sliver of aluminum, now being tested at Edwards air force base, in California, has attained speeds in level flight of about 1,500 miles an hour.

The air force also disclosed for the first time that the XF-104 is powered by a Curtiss-Wright J-65 Sapphir engine rated at more than 7,220 pounds of thrust.

The only previous air force news release on the XF-104 was a 52-word announcement 10 months ago that a contract had been signed with Lockheed Aircraft Corporation Burbank, Calif., for prototypes of the fighter.

In connection with Tuesday's announcement that the XF-104 made its first flight last February, Air Force Secretary Richard Tolbut said this contract with Lockheed represents one part of the U. S. air force's continuing program to press aggressively the development of superior weapons.

Although no specifications or performance figures have been released, the lightweight plane is said to have a straight, thin wing and a span of only 28 feet.

It is among the air force's so-called century series of fighters, all designed to travel faster than the speed of sound—760 miles an hour—in level flight.

One published report said the Lockheed XF-104 would have a downward ejection seat, instead of the type which shoots the pilot out over the top of the plane in an emergency. Downward ejection might be necessary if the XF-104 has a tall tail fin.

Girl Completes Unique Feat

OTTAWA (CP)—That clip-clop was echoing in Ana Baker's ears for a while. Four years after she set out from Buenos Aires, Argentina on horseback at the Argentine embassy Tuesday.

Bronzed by the sun during her 17,000-mile ride, Miss Baker swung tired legs to the ground to receive the greetings of the crowd gathered outside the embassy. She also received a silver maple leaf presented her on behalf of the Ottawa Valley Light Horse Association.

Two riders held her mounts, Chiquito Luchador and Puro, while she talked briefly with reporters and radio men. The 36-year-old horsewoman said she expects to remain here about eight days before returning to Buenos Aires.

Dressed in black bombachos (chap-like pants) and a black gaucho hat given her by an Argentine diplomat in Costa Rica, Miss Baker, admitted to being tired, but particularly tired of riding horseback.

OBJECTIVE ACHIEVED However, she achieved her objective — to demonstrate that women can reach any goal they set their minds on. There weren't any men present who disputed her. She appeared headed for a chilly welcome to the capital Monday. Only 19 miles from her goal, a rainstorm forced her to crouch in the saddle under a capa de goma, a circular canvas rain cape. She and her horses plodded on regardless of the rain but stopped short of the city Monday night.

Through an interpreter — she speaks only Spanish and German fluently — she told a reporter that she has never been sick a day in her life. Her health held up well during the long trip which began more than three years and nine months ago.

CARRIES REVOLVER She carries a revolver and says she has no fear of using it. She was jumped by three bandits in Mexico who robbed her of a revolver, camera and all her money. The revolver had been out of reach in one of her many saddle bags and haversacks. However, the Mexican government replaced the lost articles and the money.

She says she defended herself in Guatemala and Ecuador with the first pistol, a gift of the president of Salvador. Finances originally came from Eva Peron, late wife of the Argentine president Juan Peron. Friends and organizations en route added more funds.

IN MANITOBA BRANDON (CP)—Dike workers struggling to protect homes and a major local industry from the still-rising Assiniboine river won at least a temporary victory Tuesday.

They cut off and diked a torrent pouring through a natural ravine toward 20 homes in low-lying areas. The stream was back-up water from a dike, battered down shortly after midnight.

Thus the workers eased and possibly eliminated one of two threats Brandon Packers abbatior, one of the city's largest industries employing 150 men. Thin dikes near the plant still are holding the river itself on the other front.

Elsewhere on the two-mile dike system within the city, small holes punched in the wall were being plugged by sand bags, while giant draglines and a fleet of trucks continued to pour in fill to maintain their height above the river level.

City engineer George Durnin predicted the river would crest about six inches higher than the present 20 feet four inches.

Regional forecasts: Prince Edward Island: Sunny with a few cloudy intervals. Little change in temperature; southwest winds 15. Low-high at Charlottetown 55 and 75.

Eastern N.B. counties, Lower St. John river valley: Variable cloudiness, showers in widely scattered localities during afternoon and evening; little change in temperature; southwest winds 15. Low-high at Moncton and Fredericton 55 and 75; Saint John 55 and 70.
