National Health Week

As a part of the program for National Health Week the Provincial Department of Health and Welfare is concentrating its effort on the "Common Cold".

Two booklets, "Health Heroes" and "Health Facts", issued by the Health League of Canada and a Health Bulletin from the Provincial Department of Health and Welfare, stressing the prevention of head colds, and a poster on "Sneezing" have been sent to all the teachers in the Province.

It is believed that almost half the time lost from school and work is due to respiratory diseases, and the worst offender in this group is the "common cold".

VANCOUVER

Continued from page 1 ment with "failure" to give the country leadership, to mobilize enough forces to meet international obligations and to combat inflation and the cost of living effectively.

Other speakers in the debate during the holiday sitting included Arthur Laing (U. Vancouver (r. South); Raymond Brunette (U. Prescott); R.R. Knight (C.F. - Saskatoon); Auguste Maltais (L. - Charlevoix); and Stanley Knowles (C.F. - Winnipeg North Centre).

Mr. Knight and Mr. Knowles backed the party's demand for immediate reimposition of price controls. Mr. Laing said he believes that if Canada reimposed another full and complete set of controls it "could well be the end of free enterprise in Canada."

Mr. Brunette urged payment of a pension to the disabled and called for establishment of a "youth department" in the Government to constitute a vocational guidance school for needy young people.

Mr. Maltais said Canada must play her part in the current international crisis. He called for adoption of a national flag.

Mr. Green said that Canada must step in and help end the war in Korea. She had not done her share in the war to date. The men manning Canadian destroyers in Korea and those handling R.C.A.F. planes on the Korean airlift were doing a magnificent job. Credit also was due to men who volunteered for special army brigades.

However, he said, that at the outset of the war the Government could have sent to Korea one of the trained battalions of the regular army. Canada had missed an opportunity to stand beside the U.S., on whom she would have to depend for aid should this country be attacked.

Canada should press for a Pacific defence pact because any attack against this country likely would come from Asia.

He called for immediate action to strengthen the reserve army. Turning to the cost of living, Mr. Green said the Government's statement that it would ask for legislation to impose controls, if necessary, had simply had the effect of driving prices higher.

STOCKHOLM, Feb. 7 (AP)—The Bates hockey team of Lewiston, Me., was beaten 3-2 tonight by the Stockholm club team. The game was played in ankle-deep slush following a five-hour rain. Al Moreau and James Fife scored the Americans' goals.

Temperatures In January Highest In Eighteen Years

Temperatures in the province during January this year were the highest of any January in eighteen years, it was learned yesterday afternoon from Mr. Warren Burns, Weather Observer and Beekeeping Fieldman at the Experimental station.

The mean temperature for the past month was 24.1 degrees, only 1.6 degrees below that of January, 1933. The January, 1933 temperature of 25.7 degrees was the highest January temperature on the records kept since 1910.

Until January 26 this year, a new temperature record was being set. The cold snap at the end of the month however upset the chances for a record. Only six chances for 1910 has the mean temperature for January been over 24 degrees.

The January snowfall was three and one half degrees below the snowfall of the same month in 1950. 23 1-2 inches of snow fell during the past month. The highest January snowfall ever recorded here was in 1941 when 56 inches fell. The lowest on the other hand was the 10 inch snowfall in January, 1947.

Snowfall in the winter during the past four years have averaged about 84 inches. This seven feet of rain amounts to seven inches of rain as ten inches of snow is equivalent to 1 inch of rain. During the winter of 1951, the snowfall was 155 inches.

On nearly half the days in the run of a year it either snows or rains in this province, Mr. Burns stated. Rain or snow falls on an average of 165 days in the year.

During the past two years the bad weather days have fallen slightly below average. Rain or snow fell on 141 days in 1950 and 147 days in 1949.

The most rain falls during the last of the year in the four months from September to December. The lightest rainfall occurs during the months from April to July.

The heaviest rainfall per month on record was in September, 1942, when 12.42 inches of rain fell. On September 10 of that year the rainfall amounted to 6.45 inches.

Whitehall Notebook

By ALAN HARVEY LONDON, Feb. 7 (CP)—A committee which spent two years studying its subject came up with the conclusion that even if food is scarce in Britain, it can at least be clean.

Specifically, it recommended that a standard code of hygiene should be applied in more than 250,000 British catering establishments serving 103,000,000 meals and 171,000,000 snacks a week. The object would be to reduce the risk of food poisoning from "eating out."

The proposals were made public by a Whitehall working party, under the chairmanship of Sir William Savage, former county health officer. Members suggested that the clean-food code, to be given legal sanction wherever possible, should aim at such things as clean, well-lighted premises, plenty of hot and cold water, wash basins, towels, soap and lavatories for the staff, two sinks or a dish-washing machine for sterilizing dishes, a refrigerator and safeguards against flies, rats and mice.

Standard Equipment Most of the amenities mentioned are standard equipment in a majority of British restaurants. But one of the things that strikes a casual visitor, particularly in London, is the abundance of poky, murky little cafes ("kaffs"), the proprietors call them where shallow sandwiches and chipped cups confront a customer already intimidated by the hostelry's drab exterior.

There are many such places in the narrow lanes off Fleet Street and even in Soho you may find that "cuisine francaise" on the window merely means fish and chips or meat substitute and two "veg," served in appropriately depressing surroundings.

Election Study Correspondents who covered Britain's 1950 general election will remember a quiet scholarly Oxford don who seemed to appear wherever anything political was going on. He was H. G. Nicholas, and his purpose was to gather material for a comprehensive study of the election.

The results appear in a new book, "The British General Election of 1950," (MacMillan). It is rough on Britain's press. It contends that often the same event was interpreted with nearly opposite meanings by different newspapers. "In fact, of course, at least half the national press was interested primarily in pre-empting news as it took place, but sending it with an eye to its effect on the party of each newspaper's choice."

Terms Of Office Varies With Votes For Commissioners

The length of the terms to be served by the Commissioners elected on Tuesday in the villages of Parkdale and Craipud was determined by the number of votes each received, in accordance with statutory provision.

In Parkdale, Mr. Edwin J. Cook, 43 votes, will serve for three years, Mr. Benj. Birt with 39 votes will serve for two years, and Mr. Henry MacLaren with 31 votes has a one year term.

In Craipud, Messrs. John Nicholson and Arthur Simmonds tied with 15 votes and will cast lots to decide who has the three-year term. The other Commissioner elected with 14 votes for a one-year term was Mr. Brent Wood.

The ruling for this staggered term of office is found under section 22 of the Village Service Act which reads as follows: "The Commissioner receiving the smallest number of the votes at the first election after the issuance of the proclamation declaring the act to apply to such village shall retire from office on the first Tuesday of the February following such election. Upon the first Tuesday of the following February the commissioner receiving the next smallest number of votes shall retire from office. Upon the first Tuesday of February in each following year the senior commissioner shall retire."

Plan Long-Term Poultry Projects

Two long term poultry projects will be commenced at the Charlottetown Experimental Station this year in co-operation with several other Experimental Stations across the Dominion. It was learned yesterday from Mr. R. C. Parent, Superintendent of the local Experimental Station.

One project will work towards the improvement of the Broad Breasted White breed of fowl for meat production. The other will determine the feasibility of selection based on the progeny test as a method for increasing the egg producing ability of fowl.

The first chicks to be used in the project will arrive at the Experimental Station on March 1. 1,600 mixed chicks will be used in the meat production project. Some of these will be Broad Breasted Whites, some New Hampshires and the others a cross between the two breeds.

Half of them will be raised for broilers. Of the balance the males will be retained for roasters and the females will be housed for egg production and kept for a year.

In the egg production project, 1,000 Leghorn pullets will be used. They will be housed in the new round hen house at the Station next fall.

These projects will be carried out under the direction of Mr. Frank Tinney, Assistant to the Superintendent in Poultry and Mr. Parent.

U. N. ARTILLERY

Continued from page 1 limited United Nations offensive. The Chinese Communist 50th Army Corps retreated 5 1-2 miles over a two-day period to new positions less than six miles south of the Han.

Tee which had formed a hard surface over the river wore thin in an early thaw and began to crack. Log bridges were being thrown across the Han by Communist engineers.

As menacing as the thaw were the bayonets of U. S. troops as they fought forward with their Turkish allies.

One American bayonet charge drove Chinese from vital hill three miles west of Anyang, a small town 8 1-2 miles south of Seoul.

AP war correspondent Jim Becker reported the advancing soldiers were held up by 100 Chinese Reds, who hurled hand grenades down on them from the summit.

The Reds fled in confusion at the sight of gleaming steel, but 40 Chinese were bayoneted to death before they could escape. Another 50 were shot as they fled down the slopes.

TRIED TO FORCE

Continued from page 1 ing her to go out with him and even threatening to come and get her.

Once when the world champion figure skater was practising at the Toronto Skating Club a man forced his way inside in an attempt to talk to her. He was ejected, but no police action was taken.

CENTRAL GUARDIAN Inquest Over Infant Child Is Concluded

Death through neglect of its mother, with a recommendation that the case be left open for further investigation was the verdict returned yesterday afternoon as the inquest continued into the death of an infant whose body was found in a carton in the east end of Charlottetown.

The inquest before Coroner Dr. J. D. MacGuigan had been adjourned from Jan. 19th, the day on which the body had been discovered by two young boys.

Text of the verdict as read by the jury was as follows: "That the said infant female came to her death caused by neglect on her part of the mother, and the case be left open and investigation be continued indefinitely."

At the opening of inquest, Coroner MacGuigan advised the jury that in spite of untiring efforts on the part of the City Police Force, no proof as to the identity of the body had been forthcoming.

Mr. J. P. Nicholson, representing the Crown, called as his first witness 14-year-old David Arsenault of 118 Euston Street. The witness stated he had been looking for bottles to sell, shortly before dinner on January 19, and had been crawling under the building occupied by the J. W. Windsor, Co., Ltd., on the corner of Edward and Kent Streets.

He had seen the box under the building, wrapped in newspaper and tied with string, and had opened it and seen a hand inside. He shut the box and went to get Merritt MacLeod, who returned with him. The two boys pried the box loose from the frozen ground and pulled it out into the open. They looked into the box and saw the hand was that of a baby and after closing the container and pushing it back under the building ran to phone the police.

Merritt MacLeod, 15, 57 Edward Street, was called and his testimony bore out that of the previous witness.

Corp. A. J. Lund of the City Police Force was then called. He told of going to the warehouse in question where the Chief of Police and Sgt. Webster were waiting for him. He said he took the box from under the building and placed it on the loading platform where he opened it.

He then notified the coroner and took the baby in the box to the Cutcliffe Funeral Home where he left it with Dr. Harold Shaw, Provincial Pathologist.

The witness continued by saying the date on the newspaper in which the box had been wrapped was December 13, 1950, and that a blue and white belt, apparently from a woman's dressing gown had been tied around it. The body had been wrapped in two soiled blood-stained towels.

Dr. Harold Shaw then took the stand to tell of his findings in his examination of the body. He said it had been frozen completely in the towels, and it was a well-developed, new born baby girl, weighing 7 lbs. 4 ounces. The witness said the baby had been born, apparently without skilled medical aid, and had breathed following its birth. It had not been fed or washed, and apparently had died soon after birth.

As the boy was frozen it was impossible to say how long it had been dead before it was discovered. Witness said that, although in the towels were blood-stained there was no evidence the blood had come from the infant.

Addressing the jury, Coroner MacGuigan said it was very possible the mother of the infant had been guilty of negligence to such an extent that her baby had died, and suggested they recommend efforts to establish identity of the infant be continued until results warranted the re-opening of the case.

Members of the jury were Messrs. Thomas Rogers (Foreman), Harry Hardy, George Berrigan, William Hughes, Louis McMahon, Aben McLean, and Munroe MacLeod.

Bus Case Continues In Supreme Court

OTTAWA, Feb. 7 (CP)—Canada's two big railways argued before the Supreme Court of Canada today that New Brunswick highway legislation infringes on Federal jurisdiction.

Courts in the Canadian National Railways and Canadian Pacific Railway joined the Federal Government in contending the N. B. law is unconstitutional insofar as it purports to control interprovincial and international highway operations.

The railways intervened on the side of MacKenzie Cochrane Ltd. of Lewiston, Me., which is fighting a New Brunswick court injunction barring it from picking up or discharging passengers in that Province on its route between Boston and Glouce Bay, N. S.

The bus line and its supporters hold the N. B. legislation, under which the bus was imposed, is invalid because it trends on a field reserved to the Federal Parliament under the constitution. The present case has been regarded as the first test of Federal-Provincial jurisdiction in the transborder field, though Chief Justice Thibaulteau Rinfret suggested today it might be decided on other than constitutional grounds.

G. F. H. Carson of Toronto, representing the railways, told the court the New Brunswick statute might have "serious implications" concerning the extent of provincial powers so far as the railways are concerned.

From the constitutional standpoint, he said, there was no difference between a railway engaged in interprovincial and international traffic and a bus line engaged in the same operation.

Two of the cases were in Charlottetown and the remaining two in Prince County. All involved children under fourteen years of age with two of the victims being very young.

This brings to 74 the total number of polio cases reported in the Province since last summer. Seven of these have proved fatal. The epidemic is definitely easing off, it was stated by Dr. Curtis. None of the recent cases have caused death, it was learned.

Provisions are being made for the opening of treatment quarters at the sanatorium. These may not be in operation for several weeks.
