Let's Talk It Over

Some years ago the Prince Edward Island Government enacted legislation paving the way for the establishing of regional high schools on the island, wherever the districts of any area considered this innovation feasible. So far, the local school authorities of Prince Edward Island have been in no hurry to take advantage of this legislation, but of late, the Kensington and Summerside areas have shown some interest in this new trend of education on our island.

The establishment of regional high schools has made rapid strides in Nova Scotia in recent years, and it now looks as if our island province may become active in school consolidation too. It is always difficult to get such a movement started. Inertia plays a large part in retarding progressive movements at their outset, but, if a few such schools were established and good results obtained, other areas would more quickly fall into line.

There is little doubt that high school instruction in its various forms would be vastly improved, and accessible to country areas by means of these regional high schools. Boys and girls of the area would receive an improved academic training, and they could branch off into university, commercial or industrial training as their aptitudes and desires dictated. They could, as Premier Jones has so aptly put it, "receive a training which would fit them better for life in Prince Edward Island."

There is another important phase to the question which is sometimes not considered. Rural school teachers, with the extra chores of teaching high school subjects taken away, could do a much better job teaching the elementary grades. How they can handle elementary and high school work in one room, and do it all efficiently, has long been cause for wonder. To make matters worse, teachers' worth is often measured by the people of the communities in which they teach, by the number of pupils they get through the entrance examinations, and there is thus always the temptation present to give the high school students extra attention at the expense of the lower grades.

Workman Rescued From Top Of Chimney

NEW YORK, Dec. 1 (CP) — A workman knocked out by gas fumes was rescued Friday from a wind-swept chimney scaffold 262 feet in the air—the equivalent of 25 storeys—in a tense, 30-minute drama.

Hero of the rescue was 34-year-old Patrick McPartlan, a fitter. With one hand, McPartlan guided the inert body of Edward Glennon — bound to pulley rope — so Glennon wouldn't be smashed against the brick stack by the 30- to 40-miles an hour wind.

With his other hand, McPartlan clung to a narrow iron ladder as he descended the chimney. Spectators could only watch helplessly.
