

Japan Hopes To Maintain Heavy Buying In Canada

Japan hopes to maintain last year's record level of purchases from Canada, says Tsurunosuke Iijima, executive director of the Japan trade centre in Toronto.

Mr. Iijima, in a new release, said Japan now is undergoing a period of economic adjustment, and monetary controls are being applied to strengthen foreign-exchange reserves.

This would necessarily affect shipments from Canada, but there is every indication at present, he stated, that the Japanese economy will be strong enough to sustain buying at the 1957 level.

Last year Japan bought $139,151,938 worth of Canadian products and ranked as Canada's fourth best customer, while Canada's purchases from Japan totalled $61,604,709.

NEED RAW MATERIALS

"As a highly industrialized, heavily populated country with limited land and natural resources, Japan must continue to buy chiefly raw materials and foodstuffs," Mr. Iijima said. "However, last year Canada sold to Japan $1,500,000 worth of machinery, office machines and similar manufactured products."

In another recent statement, Mr. Iijima said the popular conception of Japan as "a low-cost production utopia" is out of date. "Ninety-nine per cent of all workers in Japan's cotton textile mills are unionized," he stated.

"Moreover, Japanese textile workers enjoy more extensive fringe benefits than their Western counterparts. The textile industry—largest employer in Japan with 25 per cent of the total industrial labor force—keeps its workers on the payroll even when business is slack and management has to borrow to keep factories operating."

OTHER BENEFITS

"In addition to fringe benefits common in North America, including paid annual vacations and statutory holidays, Japanese textile firms give maternity leave with pay, and bonuses averaging two months wages to all workers. Employees are retired at age 55.

"Unmarried employees usually live in free housing supplied by the company; there are recreational and educational facilities, sports, and social centres; medical-hospital - surgical facilities; and staff and even matrimonial counselling.

"Add to this the transportation costs of importing raw materials and shipping finished products abroad.

"Despite an impression that Japan's simpler standard of living guarantees her a price advantage, many Japanese products cannot be delivered to Canada at competitive prices.

"The result is that Japan is, in practice, restricted for foreign earnings to those lines in which she excels in manufacturing skill.

"Too often when discussing the labor situation in the cotton-textile industry people rely on facts which fit pre-war conditions and not those of the new Japan."

Mr. Iijima listed the top 15 items sold by Canada to Japan in 1957 as follows:

Wheat $15,673,393; barley $13,833,462; flax seed $11,398,705; pig iron $8,101,105; pulp sulphite $7,389,591; asbestos milled fibre $3,792,439; drugs and chemicals $2,672,759; copper scrap slag skim $2,553,105; scrap iron or steel $2,436,219; iron ore $2,342,738; aluminum in primary form $2,319,298; lead in pigs, refined $2,308,601.
