

Bill Clinton Sex Scandal

By Bawb

The immorality of the American president has reared its hideous head once again in this highly hyped up scandal concerning the revealing of his genital area to a woman in a motel room. Apparently, the case was...uh, well...actually-- You know, it's the darnedest thing, but last night as I was in the middle of watching the coverage of this story on the news, for this commentary that I had to do on it, unfortunately my dog, Carl come along and like accidentally changed the channel on the TV with his paw. It was kind of unbelievable, actually, and I gave him a biscuit for doing it, but anyway, he changed it to Charles Grodin Live.

Man, this has to be the funniest show on TV. Not because of his sense of humour of course, but just because you get to watch a televised nervous breakdown over the ongoing events of the O.J. Simpson trial every night. Man it's cool. Especially cause no one even cares about O.J. Simpson anymore. But that kind of got me thinking about Mister Rogers. Like, if there were ever a guy who looked like he was on the verge of a nervous breakdown, it would be him.

The man's like 80 years old, he obviously lives by himself in some kind of world of make believe, and he sits around and plays with dinkies and blocks all day long. Whoa. But you know, it would almost be different if he was good at playing with the blocks. But man, he sucks. I could build better than him when I was three years old.

One time I saw him pathetically trying to play basketball on the show, and I'm telling you, I would have paid a lot of money just to see Shaq make a guest appearance on that episode just to stuff his white ass. He'd be like, "You in my house now Rogers." Man, that would be cool. Straight outta da hood, that's for sure.

Which kind of brings me to the Backstreet Boys. Uh, for one thing, these pretty boy preps do not look like they are from the backstreet. When I think of backstreet I think of like poverty stricken old guys living in alleyways of cardboard boxes. Now, if these guys were called the Backstreet Bums, and were senior citizen drunkasses doing the Macarena, then that would make some sense, and would be entertaining. But they're not. And man, someone should just shoot them. Of course, the thing is that if they were actually from the backstreet, then one could go to these slums, kill them, and most likely get away with it. Which would be mean, yet soothing at the same time.

Unfortunately, however they are on my TV screen instead. Which is not very fun. Oh, well. I guess soon their five seconds of fame will be over, and they will probably end up in jail or something, charged in some kind of sex scandal, like so many like them before their time. Oh yeah. I forgot all about Bill Clinton's dick. Whoa. Oh well.

UPEI Business Students Travel to Conferences

By Finley Martin

Twelve UPEI business students and one professor travelled to conferences in Ontario and Quebec, early in November of 1996. The students took part in two conferences attended by university students from across Canada.

Six students (Shawn Rodgeron, Mark MacNeill, David DeBlois, Gerry Lawless, Steve Penney, and Shane MacEachern) and Professor Ab Ferris all travelled to Kingston, Ontario to the Queen's Conference on the Business Environment Today (or Q-BET).

Each of the delegates paid their own fees and rented a van to get to the conference. The ride to and from the Queen's conference was said to be very enjoyable, especially when "Redline" Ferris was behind the wheel.

The conference itself had an impressive array of speakers. Some of those speakers included Dr. Lloyd Atkinson, Chief Investment Strategist for Perigee Investment Counsel Inc.; Gary Reinblott, former vice president of MacDonalds Restaurants of Canada; Jerrie Fowler, Assistant Deputy of the Information High New Brunswick; and Ms. Kompston Drakes, President and General Manager of GM of Canada Ltd. The delegates agreed that the conference was a very worthwhile experience and that they took a lot information back with them.

On the same weekend, six other UPEI business students (Dale Proud, Scott Younker, Jonathan Mosher, Geoff Francis, Jonathan Arnette, and Finley Martin) attended the first annual Concordia Conference on Sports Marketing. Although the conference is in its infancy, it was extremely well organized and had a strong turnout of Canadian university students from as far east as Nova Scotia and as far west as Alberta.

Some of the speakers at the conference included Richard Pound, Vice President of the International Olympic Committee; Peter Loyello, Director of Media Relations for the Montreal Expos; Peter McAskill, President of 2nd Dimension International. The conference concluded on Friday night with a banquet at Montreal's Molson Hall with a keynote address by Director of Marketing for Molson O'Keefe Breweries, Len Rhodes.

The UPEI delegates that attended these conferences unanimously agreed that the conferences were a positive experience. They learned a lot, enjoyed themselves tremendously, and made many new friends in the business community. Some of the delegates have already expressed an interest in returning to the conferences next year.

WAY COOL TATTOOS
 198 Kent Street
 Charlottetown,
 P.E.I.
 C1A 1P2
 Phone: (902)892-8282
 Fax: (902)892-8283

Open Mon-Fri 4 pm-Midnight
 Sat Noon-Midnight

**10% discount with valid UPEI Student ID**