reader comes this letter:
"Dear Mr. Becker: Recently, Ross, Alex, Lorn and I were having a friendly evening of bridge. As host I aim to be set badly a few times each session because it gives pleasure to two-thirds of my guests. I had just got that done when I dealt the hand illustrated herewith. What was I to bid?"

"I had too good a hand to bid a pre-emptive four (according to authorities). But I am known as an adventurous bidder, and having been set three times already, I realized that Alex (my partner) would discount my bid at least 33 percent.

"A bid of one spade seemed unrealistic, so I opened two spades. West went three clubs, Alex passed. East four clubs, I seriously considered doubling refrained. West made five club losing a heart and a spade.

"Of course, I told Alex (kindly) he should have bid three spades. He replied (kindly) 'I didn't have a demand bid, and anyway the three club bid washed out the demand bid. I hold that a demand bid is written in India ink.'

"Since they made five clubs and we could have made five spades, Alex's cautiousness (or my bad reputation) cost us two games. Who was at fault: Sincerely yours, Dave."

Dear Dave: I cannot escape the conviction formed as the result of reading your letter that you are overplaying your duties as a host. One of the penalties of being known as a generous bidder is that partner, who carries the scars of previous combat, tends to become gun-shy. Consequently, it

Sally Sly's Find

Who seeks in singleness of mind, the object of his search will find. —Old Mother Nature.

Sally Sly the Cowbird was living up to her name. Among all the feathered folk there is none more sly than she. Sally was looking for a nest. She didn't want anyone to know she was looking for a nest, he didn't want any of the other feathered folk to know she was in the neighborhood. If they did they were sure to suspect what she was there for.

There was no nest there. Sally Sly has a bad name. No one has any respect for her. She is thoroughly disliked by all the other feathered folk. She knows it and she doesn't care. She is too lazy to build a nest. Anyway, that is the way it appears. Perhaps it isn't just laziness. Perhaps it is because she doesn't want the trouble of bringing up a family. Anyway, she lays her eggs in the nests of other birds and expects the latter to hatch those eggs and take care of the babies.

By experience Sally Sly has learned that some birds are smart

Campaign Tempo Rises As Leaders Swap Punches

By THE CANADIAN PRESS
As the time shortens, the words fly stronger. And with some bluntness. The Liberals are beginning to realize they're in an election campaign and "not a baby-kissing contest," said John Diefenbaker Wednesday, aiming his blows mostly at Prime Minister St. Laurent.

Suggests Help For The Aged

TORONTO (CP)—A Baptist theologian has suggested the church should help the aged in the absence of a social agency although social work "is not the primary function" of the church.

SELF-HELP LEISURE

A Montreal psychiatrist said the Canadian's approach to leisure and relaxation is derived from a "purely puritanical and Presbyterian background."
