The Captain of Lunenburg.

TEMP. 1780.

[This beautiful Legend appeared in "The King's College Record," for February, over a signature familiar to readers of THE EXAMI-NER.]

I.
At Lunenburg upon the coast,
As summer daylight fades,
A Captain and his sailors stand Bidding farewell to all on land, Both mariners and maids.

The Captain has taken leave of all Upon the little pier,
And turns where white-faced Gretchen stands,
With parted lips and clasped hands
And blue eyes full of fear.

She says, "thou shalt come back again,
And I shall welcome thee;
For I have prayed the God of Heaven,
Who unto us this boon hath given—If thou wilt pray with me."

The Captain laughs a laugh of scorn,
The maiden's eye grows dim,
"Oh, I have sailed the wildest sea, And weathered wind and storm," cries he,
"Without the help of Him."

"As I be there twenty Gods in Heaven I'll meet them on the main,
I'll sail against them o'er the sea,
And thou shalt come to welcome me,
When I sail back again."

II.
The Captain's foot is on the deck,
The white sails woo the wind,
"Good luck, God's blessing, and good bye,"
The mariners and maids cry—
And home is left behind.

As calmly as a water bird Flies o'er a lonely lake,
The little vessel takes her way Through wave-lets, sunset stained that play About her sides, and break.

As wildly as a hunted hare Bounds o'er an unknown track, She flies the water wastes along,
Before the night winds swift and strong,
By Sambre bleak and black;

Along the coast, by Arichat,
And by Boularderie,
A few days sail, now less or more,
Would bring her to the Labrador, Where she is wont to be.

III.
But o'er the broad Atlantic breast
The blasts of tempest blow;
By mighty east winds she is driven,
On crested waves hurled up to heaven
Then down to depths below;

By Margerie, and Tracadie, By bluff and frolicious beach,
Then all across the misty main,
That beats the isles of Maleleins, Nor any rest can reach.

The Captain stands still at the helm,
And hence his face to see,
"The God of Heaven revenge will wreak While I a refuge vainly seek!"
But never a prayer says he.

The lightning flashes in the sky,
It lums the waves the while;
The sailors shriek with lengthened breath
"Oh, save us, Saviour Christ, from death, From death on Deadman's Isle!"

IV.
The storm has ceased; the morn appears Far o'er the eastern sea;
And the golden orient seems to smile
At the ship lying under Deadman's Isle, As safe as safe can be.

The Captain laughs a laugh of scorn,
For the danger now is past;
"Though five long days and nights I've striven With the God they call of Earth and Heaven, I've conquered him at last.

"But my ship is shattered, its sails are rent, A mast is cleft in twain;
So ere I fish at the Labrador I must go to Lunenburg once more And fit me out again.

"Then I will marry my white-faced love
Who will come to welcome me;
With a kiss I'll kiss away her tears,
And quiet all her woman's fears,
For me upon the sea."

V.
The vessel leaves the refuge found,
And homeward takes her way;
Through seas where hangs a misty screen Around the isles of Maleleins, Across St. Lawrence Bay.

By Margerie she moves along,
And by Boularderie
As slowly as some woodland thing Creeps to its nest with wounded wing—Till home at last comes she.

VI.
What is that with pacing slow
They hear along the tow?
A maiden dead, upon a bier,
And now upon the little pier
They set the burden down.

A maiden dead upon a bier,
Coming her love to greet;
Fair flowers of the early June And sad eyed violets are strewn Over her winding sheet.

Oh, bloodless is her face of bleo,
As stainless as her soul!
Oh, bloodless too the hands that rest
Among the lilies on her breast, Clasping a written scroll!

The Captain stands beside the dead,
He reads the written scroll:
"My love, I come to welcome thee On thy return from over sea—
A corpse without a soul.

"Bend low, bend low, beside my bier,
For pardon now implore
The God thou hast so oft defied!
To bring thee to Him I have died, Yet live for evermore."

The Captain bends beside the bier; A humbled man is he.
Upon her hands he rests his head, Mourning across the maiden dead,
"God, thou hast conquered me."

They bear her to her resting place,
With weeping and with sighing
The flower that gives the life it lives For death that life to other gives,
Is better for the dying.

JOSEPH POOLE.

CORRESPONDENCE.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for the opinions or statements of our correspondents

To the Editor of the Examiner.

DEAR SIR,—I see by the "Patriot" of the 11th inst. a statement to this effect: that there is not a man to be found in this Province, who is not in the public service or receives some of the public plunder, that will defend the policy of the Dominion Government.

Now, Mr. Patriot, as you are in the habit of advising the farmers of this Island in regard to the tariff, I wish to know if it is safe to accept your advice? Before the election of 1878, you made some statements in your campaign issues, in regard to the present tariff. The farmers of this Province have serious doubts as to the truth of your statements. I wish, therefore, Mr.
Editor, you would review some of the "Patriot's" editorials in the summer of 1878, in regard to the tax on flour, tea, salt, sugar, &c., and see if our experience of the present tariff will bear us out in accepting the statements of the "Patriot" in view of a general election.

I fail to see, as a Conservative, by the prices of those articles now and in 1878, where the high living or robbery comes in for the poor farmers. You say that the farmers of Ontario know which side their bread is buttered on. So they do, and they will keep so, and don't you forget it.
I remain as ever,
Yours truly,
JACK OUT OF OFFICE,
Vernon River, April 11, 1882.

Lightning Freaks.

A MIRACULOUS ESCAPE OF A WHOLE FAMILY AT LOCKHARTVILLE.

(Windsor, N. S., Mail.)

Thunder and lightning are very unusual at this season of the year. On Sunday afternoon last, the sky clouded up, and there was every appearance of a thunder storm at hand, but it passed away as quietly as it came, and the distant rumbling of thunder and a flash or two of lightning was all that was felt or seen in Windsor. At Hantsport the storm was more severe. At Lockhartville, four miles from Hantsport, the house of Mr. J. Henry Smith, a well-to-do farmer, was struck by lightning and severely damaged. It was about four o'clock in the afternoon. The family, consisting of Mr. Smith, his wife and five children, were assembled in the kitchen, which is an ell attached to the main house.
The lightning or electric fluid, which is described as a ball of fire, struck the chimney and shattered it from top to bottom, scattering the bricks and soot through every part of the house. Some bricks were driven with such force that they went clean through the partition. The noise of the explosion or concussion was something terrible, and the house and everything in it seemed a blaze of light. The stove pipe was torn to pieces, but the drum was the only part of the stove injured. The current seemed to have followed down and went through the stove, as a hole was burned in the floor large enough to let the leg fall through. A pair of woollen mittens, which were on the floor near the stove, were singed as if by a red hot poker. The whole ell was swung away from the main building fully three feet, and the roof was lifted three feet from its place.
The doors going into the main part of the house and the leaving out into the yard were both burst from their fastenings and hinges. Dishes on the dresser were smashed and danced merrily about. The most singular thing is that all this could happen without injuring any of the family. Mr.
Smith was lying on the lounge over five inches under a window. The sash and whole window was burst out and carried into the field, but very few panes of glass were broken. Mrs. Smith and the rest of the family were comparatively uninjured, any more than badly frightened, but they all bear some slight marks of being burnt.
On the whole this is the most miraculous escape we ever heard of. The facts and more too, can be vouched for by many citizens of Hantsport who visited the scene shortly after.

Landlordism Extraordinary.

The Cumberland papers print a singular story respecting Sir Wilfrid Lawson and one of his tenants. The hon. baronet's steward reported that one of the farms had been recently re-let on a ten years' lease, at an increased rental of £30 per annum.
Sir Wilfrid inquired who was responsible for the improvement, and was told that it had been effected by the tenant, upon which he wrote out and sent to him a cheque for £200. Looked at in the light of encouragement to an enterprising tenant, the act reflects honour upon the worthy baronet, and we heartily wish that every landlord in the kingdom had the will and the means to act likewise. If this were done, England would have but little trouble over her land question.

Prof. James Geikie holds that "the construction of the Panama Canal will have as much effect upon the Gulf Stream and the climate of North-western Europe as the emptying of a teapotful of boiling water in the Arctic Ocean would have in raising the annual temperature of Greenland." The Isthmus of Panama would have to be submerged not less than 800 to 1,000 feet before the waters of the Gulf Stream could find their way into the Pacific Ocean.

A PROMINENT politician and active journalist, Mr. George I. Graham, connected with the Philadelphia "Sunday Mirror," who, by using the Great German Remedy, St. Jacob's Oil, was cured of a troublesome case of rheumatism, contracted during the war. He closes a long statement with—"to those who are afflicted with that complaint, it is worth its weight in gold."
