

Expect PM Will Look For Lieutenant In Quebec

By ALAN DONNELLY
Canadian Press Staff Writer
OTTAWA (CP) — Prime Minister Diefenbaker may get something more than simply three new cabinet ministers when he carries out his announced plan of doubling Quebecs cabinet representation to six members.

In choosing his men, it is virtually certain he will be looking for one who could become a French-speaking political lieutenant.

Almost every English-speaking prime minister has had a strongman in Quebec who could attract and hold the election allegiance of that province.

But of the nine Quebec Conservatives in the last Parliament—seven of them French-speaking—none filled the role that Sir Georges Etienne Cartier did for Prime Minister Sir John A. Macdonald after Confederation, or that the late Ernest Lapointe and Louis St. Laurent did for Prime Minister Mackenzie King.

LOTS OF MATERIAL
Now that the March 31 election has loosened the Liberal party's grip in Quebec and put Progressive Conservative MPs in 50 of the province's 75 ridings, Mr. Diefenbaker will have plenty of material to choose from.

Five new Commons members have been frequently mentioned in published speculation as likely cabinet material:

Yvon Tasse, 47, of Quebec East an engineer and former chairman of the Greater Quebec Trade and Industrial Development Bureau; Charles Campeau, 41, of Montreal St. Jacques, also an engineer and former director of Montreal's urban planning department; Noel Dorion, 53, of Bellechasse, a widely-known prosecutor and a Union Nationale party candidate in the 1944 provincial election; Pierre Sevigny, 40, of Longueuil, a businessman and former chief Conservative organizer in the province, and Jacques Flynn, 42, of Quebec South, a lawyer and Laval University professor.

QUEBEC MEMBERS
Present Quebec representatives in the 22-member cabinet are Solicitor-General Balcer, Postmaster-General Hamilton and Mines Minister Comtois.

Addition of three new ministers likely will give Canada its biggest cabinet in history.

In the present cabinet, Ontario has seven representatives, British Columbia three, Saskatchewan and Manitoba two each, and the other five provinces one each.

There are four cabinet vacancies.
