Y.M.C.A. News

The Y's Menettes wound up their bowling season in grand fashion on Tuesday afternoon, as they played bridge, bowled, and presented prizes to their outstanding bowlers of the season. The afternoon was brought to a fine finish with a supper served by the Ladies' Auxiliary. This is the second "wind-up" supper for the Menettes, and they seem well on the way to establishing an admirable tradition. Prizes were won by:

Mrs. R. Barrett (high average); Mrs. C. Wilkins (high single); Mrs. J. Cameron (high three); Mrs. G. Ives (high spare); Mrs. L. Ley (high three spare).
The team of Mrs. J. Cameron had highest points for the season, and each member was presented with a prize.

Monday night was the last regular night of the So-Eds series, and about sixty young people enjoyed the final lectures in civic affairs, religion and modern problems, and personality patterns. Earlier in the evening the regular groups in photography, music appreciation, folk dancing, a bridge meet for their instructional sessions. The instructors in these courses deserve particular praise for their interest and efforts to make the six weeks series interesting as well as educational. All of them have given unstintingly of time and effort during the entire series. We are happy to hear that the photography group plan to continue meeting throughout the spring, and possibly into the summer.

Because of the deep interest in the social aspect of So-Eds, the So-Ed committee planned a special program for next Monday night. It was announced during the course of the evening, that an interesting and entertaining program had been planned for next week, and that all So-Eders were invited to dress up in their worst for the "Hobo Party." According to spokesman Earl MacDonald, the dizzy doins' will begin about eight o'clock, and end about the usual time.

Rumors of big things to come in the Easter holidays are getting thicker around here. As a matter of fact, Ann Woodside has confirmed most of them. It seems that the Beta Hi-Y are up to their ears in planning their big Easter-time semi-formal dance. The girls have some great ideas for decorations, specialty numbers, and surprises for the guests at the "Spring Prom." With music by the Downtowners orchestra, this looks like the affair to attend.

The Senior Teen Towners enjoyed an excellent dance last week, and the number and variety of specialty dances were well received. The committee just used that as a practice session though, for what they have cooking this week. Those with long memories will recall that just about a year ago, Teen Town got under way. So, in celebration of this great event, a big and exciting night is planned for April, the first. With surprises and novelties galore, the committee promises that the biggest fool on April Fool's Day is the one who misses Teen Town!

"Shakespeare was of us, Milton was for us, Burns, Shelley, were with us,—they watch from their graves! He alone breaks from the van and the freemen, He alone sinks to the rear and the slaves. Life's night begins; let him never come back to us. There would be doubt, hesitation and pain. Forgive me on our part—the glimmer of twilight. Never glad confident morning again."

Wordsworth was above all a nature poet, and believed that in a sense she was alive. In Nutting he bids himself "to tread softly because there is a spirit in the woods." "Tintern Abbey," some said, "was as new to literature as the sermon was to religion." Wordsworth is a good companion to take with you to the country, provided you have learned to love and appreciate him—otherwise he will be as dust. Open your soul to him and breezes from fields of asphodel will come to you laden with sweet fragrance.

Arnold declares that "he is one of the chief glories of English poetry and in nothing is England so great as in her poetry." And again Arnold says this about his master: read him and there shall be shed:

"On spirits that had long been dead, Spirits dried up and closely furled The freshness of the early world."

Literature And Life

By BOOKMAN

Wordsworth, after One Hundred Years

Wordsworth has been dead one hundred years, and in April, 1850 Matthew Arnold avowed Wordsworthian wrote "memorial verses" about him. After paying his respects to Byron and Goethe he honours Wordsworth, and imagines him welcomed in the shadowy world, praying that the inmates may feel his "soothing voice." He speaks of the poet's "healing power." Others may teach us how to dare, "But who, ah! who will make us feel?" These lines gather up what he meant to the reading world:

"He found us when the age had bound Our souls to its benumbing round; He spoke, and loosed our heart in tears. He hid us, as we lay at birth On the cool flowery lap of earth, Smiles broke from us and we had ease; The hills were round us, and the breeze Went over the sun-lit fields again; Our forehead felt the wind and rain. Our youth returned; for there was shed . . . The freshness of the early world."

Arnold also wrote an admirable essay on Wordsworth and edited his poems, riding them, as he said of the "encumbering baggage,"—meaning that there was much that he wrote which only detracted from what was excellent.

Walter Bagehot in his essay on Hartley Coleridge, pauses to say something about Wordsworth. This is an extract: "There is a print of Rembrandt which is said to represent a piece of the campaign, a mere waste, with a stump and a man, and under is written, 'Tacet et loquitur'; and thousands will pass the old printshop where it hangs, and yet have a taste for but some fanciful students, some lonely stragglers, some long-haired enthusiasts, by chance will come, one by one, and look, and look, and be hardly able to take their eyes from the fascination so massive is the shade, so still the conception, so firm the execution. Thus it is with Wordsworth and his poetry. Tacet et loquitur, fashion an art, the million won't read it. Why should they?—they could not understand it. Don't put them out,—let them buy, and sell, and die,—but idle students and enthusiastic wanderers, and solitary thinkers, will read, and read, and read, while their lives and their occupations hold. In truth his works are the scriptures of the intellectual life."

All of which is true and well said. He is not what we might call a popular poet, and to understand and appreciate him one must have a certain kind of mind and training. Browning is supposed to refer to him in his stirring poem—"The Lost Leader." "The poet, and yet but idle students and enthusiastic wanderers, and solitary thinkers, will read, and read, and read, while their lives and their occupations hold. In truth his works are the scriptures of the intellectual life."

Wordsworth was above all a nature poet, and believed that in a sense she was alive. In Nutting he bids himself "to tread softly because there is a spirit in the woods." "Tintern Abbey," some said, "was as new to literature as the sermon was to religion." Wordsworth is a good companion to take with you to the country, provided you have learned to love and appreciate him—otherwise he will be as dust. Open your soul to him and breezes from fields of asphodel will come to you laden with sweet fragrance.

Arnold declares that "he is one of the chief glories of English poetry and in nothing is England so great as in her poetry." And again Arnold says this about his master: read him and there shall be shed:

Bristol-Myers denies FTC Charges

Stating that he was 'not surprised' and welcomed the decision of the U. S. food and drug administration to continue to permit retail sale of the antihistamine cold drug, "Resistab," Mr. C. George Health of the Bristol-Myers Co. of Canada, strongly repudiates any suggestion that the benefits of Resistab have been misrepresented in company advertising.

In a published statement following the Federal Trade Commission's recent charge that "Resistab" advertising is "false and misleading," Mr. Heath asserts that "the claims made for Resistab, based as they are, on intensive research in clinical laboratories, have been more than substantiated by company reports of the effects of large-scale use of this product by the public. In no case has the use of Resistab been followed by any harmful effects. Indeed, the confidence of the company in its products has been confirmed, and even increased, by the growing public realization of the benefits cold-sufferers derive from the prompt use of 'Resistab,' taken as directed."
