DEAR MISS DIX: My 13-year-old sister has just entered high school, where I am a junior. She ignores every bit of advice I give her, and I'm sure if she keeps on she will be very unpopular. I try to tell her how to dress, and how to behave, but it's useless.

ANSWER: The only group more sure of itself than high-school juniors is high-school freshmen. Your sister's reactions are quite normal, and I suggest that you leave her alone instead of trying to run her life. High school is fun, as well as work, and the youngster has to find her own niche. Did anyone run behind you in freshman days with constant advice? And would you have appreciated it if someone had? Of course you wouldn't, and your sister doesn't either. In time she'll come to you for advice; withhold it until then.
