ELLEN'S DIARY

Lads Tred Mill Road Hopeful Of Good Catch

So our maple grove is no more. It is gone, lost as are so many of the items through the years from our living, to make way for modern ways and demands. And on into a greater wood nearby, the harvesters moved today to gather up fuel for the homes. To be their cooks' treasure - to - warm their rooms and be their genii, when they bake and brew.

We like to believe, as some woodsmen do, that every color or tint to which a tree is exposed during its life, glows in the fire when that tree is burned.

"Look deep into the coals" one reminds us, "and you can find the pinks and violets of dawn, the blueness of the sky, the burning brightness of the noonday sun, the angry black of a thundercloud, the crimson of the sunset, the silver radiance of the moonlight, and the brilliant transparency of the stars."

Young dreams too, we could always glimpse in an open fire, woven fetchingly into the fabric there. Because the passing years tend to make one more practical, we see in the flames now more of the day - by - day doings, as we do too in a woodpile. The humble yet satisfying things: dishes clean in a cupboard, a line of wash, a tea - kettle's blithe tune, a row of loaves new-baked, a cake, a pie, a cookie jar filled.

"The fields are commencing to look more springlike. Yes, this week has made quite a change — put a different look on things" a farmer come to the yard this morning offered. "Sun and a drying wind like this — that's what does it!" he smiled.

Pleasant the week was. The days returned scenes of former springs to us, familiar sights of the seasonal cleaning: gulls circling high, brightest glints on the wavelets in the stream, lads come in over the hill top, or out the road, to first fishing. Steps happy along the old millroad, hopes high, anticipating a good catch.

"Not been down yet, Mack" one who came up "to see if I could borrow a hook" from him, queried, this noon.

"Not yet."

"How come?"

"Too busy! I'm working in the woods these days, in my spare time" he replied.

The womenkind continue the spring cleaning, finding it, all in all, an interesting and satisfying chore. It is a time when one selects from her accumulation of "goods and chattels" the items she would discard, and those she would tidily save. And generally, what savers we housewives are! Jame Marchand has discovered there are two sides to "The Savers." She has put it in verse, which has a nice thought:

"She saves scraps of paper, and gay cotton prints,
And gives understanding, and love without stint.
She saves bits of string, and sunflower seed,
And gives of herself to any in need.
It's good to be saving' she often would say,
'Tis good to have something for giving away.'
God blesses people, and lighthearted lot,
Whose heads are thrifty, and hearts are not.

Until Monday — Diary — Good - night...

EXPORTS RISE

OTTAWA (CP) — Canadian exports in March rose in value by 10.6 per cent to a record for the month of $599,700,000 from last year's previous March peak of $501,600,000, the bureau of statistics said Tuesday. This brought the value of exports in the first three months of 1964 to $1,783,300,000, a gain of 20 per cent compared with 1963's first quarter total of $1,486,100,000.

Bread Turns "Chicken" For Souffle-ish Dish

SPOON bread is a traditional American food, always based on cornmeal, either scalded with boiling water, or cooked in water or milk, combined with eggs, baked like custard, and usually teamed with panned smoked ham or bacon.

"This American spoon bread I believe could be transformed into a new type of French chicken souffle," remarked our Chef. "Cornmeal could be cooked in chicken broth, chopped oddments of cooked chicken meat added, then egg yolks to thicken and make smoothe. Last, the egg whites could be beaten stiff and folded in — then baked like a souffle."

Two Suggestions

"Let's try it in the test kitchen, Chef; but first I have two suggestions: beat a little cream of tartar with the egg whites, so they can be stiff enough to hold up the heavy cornmeal mixture; and stand the dish containing the spoon bread in a pan containing hot water an inch deep to slow - up the cooking and allow both the cornmeal and egg whites the utmost expansion."

"Very good, Madame. In time for lunch the new spoon bread will be ready."

A success Try it for yourself!

Measurements level, receipes for 6

RECIPE OF THE WEEK
CHICKEN SPOON BREAD

1½ c. chicken broth
½ c. enriched cornmeal
½ tsp. salt
½ c. cold water
¼ tsp. cream of tartar
1 c. fine - chopped cooked chicken
4 egg yolks
4 egg whites, stiff

Heat oven to mod. (375 degrees F.). Bring chicken broth to rapid boil.

Mix cornmeal and salt with cold water. Pour into chicken broth, stirring constantly. Cook until thickened, about 10 min.; stir often.

Remove from heat; cool 10 min. at room temperature. Stir in cream of tartar and chicken.

Beat egg yolks until thick and lemon - colored. Stir into cornmeal mixture. Beat egg whites stiff and fold in.

Pour into 3 pt. souffle dish or straight - sided casserole. Place in shallow pan; add hot water in pan to depth of 1 inch. Bake at 375 degrees F. about 60 min. without opening oven door. Serve at once.

Combine tomato, water, sugar, salt, onion juice and sauce.

When boiling rapidly, stir in well - beaten eggs.

Stir constantly and very fast until soup is full of little yellow strings. Serve at once. Do not rub through sieve.

SUGGESTION OF THE CHEF

Mesdames: In the test kitchen, we tried several other spoon breads containing meat. For example, chopped cooked ham or turkey in place of chicken. Canned tuna instead of chicken also makes a fine spoon bread, especially when ¼ tsp. powdered dill seed is added.

We also baked the souffle mixtures individually in 6 (8 oz.) heat - resistant glass bowls. Very attractive, with a garnish of a red radish and crisp water cress on each of the plates beneath.
