CANOE COVE

The unusually fine weather has been a great asset to the farmers, who are almost through their spring work.

Mr. Neil MacCannell spent the week end at his home in Canoe Cove accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. A. K. MacPhee.

The many friends of Rev. J. W. S. Lowry deeply regret his passing away at the P. E. Island Hospital. He will be greatly missed by all both young and old. He was a loyal and devoted member of the L. O. L. and took an active part in everything pertaining to the good of the community. Mrs. Lowry has returned to Canoe Cove after accompanying the remains of her beloved husband, the late Rev. J. W. S. Lowry to Ottawa for burial. She is at present the guest of Mr. and Mrs. R. MacRae.

Friends of Garfield McEachern are sorry to learn that he is confined to his home through illness and hope for a speedy recovery.

The annual meeting of the Canoe Cove Church was held on the evening of June 9th. A large number was present. It proved to be the most successful year in the history of the Church. The Secretary, Treasurer reported the receipt of six hundred and sixty-three dollars ($663.00) for the year, with all obligations met, and a balance of forty dollars in the Treasurer's hands.

The Rev. J. M. Murchison of the Bible Society held service in Canoe Cove Church on the evening of June 15th. He took for his text the words of the Psalmist, "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet and a light unto my path." At the close of the meeting a Bible Society was organized.

Mr. Alexander Campbell, son of the late James Campbell of Rice Point has been visiting old friends and relatives at Canoe Cove after an absence of forty years. He is the guest of his sister, Mrs. William MacDonald, Rocky Point.

Provides Link With Canada's Pioneer Years

LONDON, June 23—(OP)—It is not ungracious to say so, a retrospect of the life of Princess Louise, Duchess of Argyll, great-aunt of King Edward, involves in very truth, the turning back of many pages of modern history. Her Royal Highness, sixth daughter of Queen Victoria, celebrated her 88th birthday in March last. Naturally enough the Princess is nowadays practically never seen in public. It is many years, in fact since she took any definite part in the life of the nation, nevertheless she still enjoys remarkably good health, and from her placid quarters in Kensington Palace maintains a real interest in what is going on in the world at large.

At the time Princess Louise was born the Queen's Ministers had such a fear of a popular rising in England against the monarchy—Louis Philippe had just been de-throned in France—that the royal children were removed hurriedly from Buckingham Palace to what was deemed a safe haven at Osborne, Isle of Wight. Lady Lytton, who was governess to the children, uttered the gloomy prognostication that the Prince of Wales was hardly likely to be a Prince for 10 years longer. Martial law was proclaimed in London, but the great demonstration which some fearful souls in high places considered might bring a revolution ended in complete fiasco.

The unfortunate atmosphere in the country at the time of the birth of Princess Louise had been apparent in a rather different form when in 1871 she was married to the Marquis of Lorne, who afterwards became Duke of Argyll. The wedding was recognized as a happy reversal of the common order of things which had been ruling for long in regard to royal unions, for the nation had become openly exasperated at Queen Victoria's pro-German sympathies. More particularly was there resentment at the number of German princelings who had married into the royal family.

Ireland was in one of its periodic states of political turmoil. Princess Louise, with her husband the Marquis of Lorne, accompanied her brother, the Prince of Wales (afterwards King Edward VII) on a visit to Dublin within a few weeks of her wedding. There was some hissing of the royal party in the streets, but the Prince's easy, genial bearing and the graciousness of his sister soon disarmed any hostile feeling, and the visit continued under entirely happy circumstances.

MADE GOVERNOR-GENERAL OF CANADA

In 1878 the Marquis of Lorne was appointed Governor-General of Canada. "He has a fine career open to him," wrote the Prince of Wales at the time, "and my sister also living in one of our most important colonies cannot fail to have a most excellent effect." According to King Edward's official biographer, the late Sir Sidney Lee, it was something of a disappointment that the Marquis following his tenure of office in Canada, "was entrusted with no further responsibilities of the kind."

In 1900 he succeeded his father as Duke of Argyll. Thereafter the Duke and Duchess lived very quietly, the Duke being an agreeable if not a distinguished writer both in prose and poetry, and the Duchess fulfilling many of those gracious functions in the way of opening hospitals and laying foundation stones which are so often undertaken by royal folk. The Duke and Duchess were childless. The resentment against the German "invasion" into the British royal family remained for many years and often found expression. That famous old-time comedian Chirgwin, "the white-eyed Kaffir" used to create roars of delight in a music hall with verses which ran in part: When the fair Louise wed the Lord of Lorne My heart was filled with joy, sirs, But alas and alack and well-a-day, They've neither a girl nor a boy, sirs, So in our royal family now, There's neither a son nor a daughter, But what we've got from the German stock, Imported over the water. The song was in reference to the marriage in 1889 of the royal Louise of the next generation, daughter of the Prince of Wales, to the Duke of Fife. Another stanza ran: So in eighteen hundred and eighty nine, We've come to the dawn of reason, And an Englishman may speak his mind, And not be accused to reason. It shows good sense in the Prince of Wales, And in his eldest daughter, To choose a mate from the British Isles, And not from over the water. So the hard-earned money of Englishmen, We can keep at home just now, sirs, And give it all to the Duke of Fife, And not stick it in German trousers.

BROWN BETTY

1 large cup grated bread crumbs
6 or 8 slices Canadian-grown apples
1/2 cup cold water and sugar
1/2 cup molasses
Butter and spices.
Butter a baking dish; put on the bottom a layer of sliced Canadian-grown apples, and over the apples a layer of stale grated bread crumbs, just thick enough to cover the layer of apples and add little lumps of butter, sugar, and a pinch of cloves, all-spice and cinnamon. Then begin again with another layer of crumbs, and so on until the dish is filled, ending with a thick layer of crumbs and lumps of butter. With a knife make a space on four sides between the dish and the pudding, and pour in a 1/2 cup of molasses and a half cup of cold water sweetened with sugar. Smooth the spaces over, and set the dish in a pan of boiling water and bake until the apples are tender and the crumbs slightly brown. Serve with cream or with lemon pudding sauce.

COLORS AND HEALTH.

It is only within recent times that scientists have begun to associate colors with health. They know, for instance, that blue is a soothing color—so soothing, in fact, that too much blue in the color scheme is liable to cause melancholia.
