Approximately two hundred children were entertained at the party which included a lively sing-song featuring Christmas songs and music. The party was organized by a committee under the chairmanship of Conrad Pele, assisted by Leo MacDonald, Roddie Martin and other members of the branch.

Young Hospital Patients Present Annual Concert

The school room of the Provincial Sanatorium was a happy scene Friday afternoon when the pupils of Mrs. Lloyd Hawkes, presented their annual Christmas concert, a seasonal event always eagerly anticipated by the children, the staff and numerous guests.

Before a background of Christmas decorations most of which were made by the children, plus the traditional Christmas tree, the brief but inspiring concert beautifully portrayed the fact that Christmas is the birthday of Jesus, marking the time when love, hope and salvation came to the world through the babe of Bethlehem two thousand years ago. Symbols of the season were a birthday cake with twenty candles, each representing a century of time. Following the recited words, "Let your light so shine..." the matron of nurses, Mrs. Howard MacDonald, and Gary who blew out the candles.

The children taking part in the concert were: Leonard Gallant, St. Charles, Margie McGraith, Morel, Heather Gallant, Summerside, and Judy MacClure, Montague.

The happy event had a tinge of sadness for those present, knowing that this was to be the last Christmas a concert Mrs. Hawkes would direct at the Sanatorium, as she and Mr. Hawkes are soon to take up residence at Chipman, N.B. Mrs. Hawkes has been the school teacher at the Sanatorium for the past seven years and in addition to her teaching talents has brought to her work great love for children and these combined qualities have tended to give the many children who have come under her care, not only a solid elementary education but also the best for life.

On staff Mrs. Hawkes was presented with a special gift.

MARY HAWORTH Guardian Angel Prompts Divorcee To Call A Halt

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Recently I had occasion to visit a medical doctor, not my regular family physician. He is young (mid-thirties), very attractive, very likeable, married about two years to an ordinary looking young woman (her picture is prominently displayed in his office).

I am a divorcee, past 35, and probably not credited with old-fashioned principles.

In any case, I was pleased with his diagnosis and advice, but to my shocked surprise, he kissed me resoundingly on the cheek as I was leaving. I covered my confusion with an air of amusement.

On the next visit it happened again, with a more personal flavor this time. Suddenly I found myself intrigued and looking forward to these exciting half-hours in his office.

Then one morning (possibly prompted by my guardian angel), I suddenly took stock of my situation and called a firm halt (just short of disaster, I think). Meaningful words were exchanged, his flirtatious favors were bestowed upon all young and not-so-young, including his receptionist.

Evidently he had some ingrati-

SOCIALS SOLICITED

Crisp December weather has inspired, the usual round of social events. News of coffee parties, afternoon teas, bridge parties or house-warming are only a few of the items The Guardian - Evening Patriot women's editor will be happy to publish free of charge. Do you have visitors? Perhaps a former islander who friends would like to contact.

inquiring, I suppose, into his motivation for dispensing kisses and flirtatious attention particularly in his daily professional dealings with women.

By the way of reply, my first guess is that he just likes women. Or at any rate feels at ease with them and takes for granted that they all like him, or will if they get to know him.

Also, he may take for granted that if a woman client prefers not to be kissed a second time, she will manage to prevent it without offense. Further, he may suppose that a woman who offers to give a shower or entertaining party for her friends would like to be kissed a second time, she will manage to prevent it without offense.

The human race includes a pleasant stratum of sixty-type males occupying masculine roles in society, who tend to embrace women acquaintances or social associates on sight, with a casualness, a kind of smug detachment, that suggests women really don't stir them much, don't really don't have to be kept at length to pass the time. As a first measure of self-control.

As for the type of man who finds women too disturbing sexually to be lightly kissed or embraced, I believe that one of Lincoln's biographers indicates that he was such a man. As I recall, the biographer mentions that Lincoln, in the presence of women (or at least in the presence of women) seemed actually to tremble with tension caused by his firm restraint of his fundamentally powerful attraction to them.

As for the doctor's other women patients who flock around primarily (you think) to enjoy his sunshine or at least his advice is, don't worry about them. Nor about his wife, who probably knows of his office manner with the ladies, and feels secure in the fact that he married her. M.H.

Tropical Christmases Lead To Curious Tree Collection

BY PEGGY TANFIELD
CAPE CORAL, Fla. — Christmas is creeping into a place where the winds are without benefit of chill winds or snow. Stores are displaying Christmas wrappings in aluminum Christmas trees and cutouts of Santa, looking in a bearably warm bundled up in his traditional red snowsuit in the 85-degree weather.

The advent of Christmas and its trimmings in a place such as Cape Coral always comes with a shock to anyone coming from a such northerly place as Canada, where a green Christmas tree is the exception rather than the rule.

Take the business of buying Christmas cards to send to friends in Toronto and Ottawa, for instance. Come off a pallid boulevard, where blossoms and bouzouville are ubiquitous in a riot of color, and to into an air-conditioned drugstore. There you are confronted with the plus of Christmas cards of snow-covered scenes, with horses dragging huge Yule trees through snowdrifts at least twenty feet deep. An odd feeling.

Then there are Christmas trees. A few days before Christmas Day, real trees go on sale. Because of the warmth, the expectancy of Christmas trees here is not very long, and many people turn to artificial trees green or shiny aluminum collapsible affairs.

These work out very well, except that the gap between one Christmas and the next is so great that by the time they are seen in stores has arrived, the tree used for the first Christmas has mysteriously disappeared and a new one must be purchased. The first tree invariably turns up the day after that to have moved away from the store.

Your Christmas at Cape Coral will be so much merrier if the thought of the bedlam in that house up North on Christmas morning when 13 children

Tish Residents Prepare For Happy Yuletide Season

TISHING — With Christmas just a few days away home owners and business establishments in the Tish community are making last minute preparations for a happy Yule season.

Some of the homes gaily decorated with Santa catch the eyes of the younger fry as they plan for his arrival late on Christmas eve.

Other prize winners were Wayne MacDonald, G.V. Quinn, Louise Pauley, Mervin Emsie, Dorothy Crane Douglas Miller, Patrick Donahue, R. MacMillan, Sandra Boehmer, Elaine Beck, Isabelle Turray, Murray Freeman, Pat Bilard, Anne let their alligators loose all at the same time. They are the thought of those same children some years later, much to the chagrin of their parents and grown alligators in one small house — or there may even be fewer children by then.

Another bit of woe is a gift to send northward is a bushel of two of Florida oranges or grapefruit. People send these off in all directions around Christmas-time with a vengeance, full of good cheer and the thought of sharing typical Florida produce with friends. The thought never enters their minds exactly what the recipient does with the 100 oranges or 48 grapefruit which each bushel basket holds.

Then for people who are fond of, there are truly delightful items. These are lovely items, made from shells — or the shells themselves, like the eight to 12-inch Christmas shells with its gleaming mother-of-pearl lining, exceed in North and little bundles of shells to delight a northern child's heart.

There are jams and jellies from such fruits as guava, pineapple, orange, lime, calomondin and strange syrups of all kinds which are bottled and boxed ready for mailing. And there are flowers of all descriptions, from orchids chrysanthemum and a gladioli. This country is the gladioli center of the world.

Every Christmas, a part of Florida goes out all over the United States, to Canada and to various parts of the world, and the thought of the bedlam in that house up North on Christmas scene, when the parcels are opened around the Christmas tree.

at moderate prices with which to cheer, amaze, or dismay the folks back home.

Items range from the excitingly beautiful to the Retiree's average — or at least in many ways at getting even with relatives or neighbors you are really glad to see.

Say, for instance, you had a neighbor up North whose 13 children used to trample your peonies — then by all means send each of the kids a baby alligator. (Actually, alligators are protected by law in Florida, and what really goes off in the little box all punched full of holes is a South American Cayman, an almost exact duplicate of an alligator but with a slight difference in color and girth).
